

Wage incentives, training grants and more

Written By CATHY PERENNEC MCLEAN

Constant change is the norm for business today. Whether through growth and expansion, launching new products or downsizing to become more efficient, business leaders need people who share and support their direction and vision. Finding and keeping people with the right skills when you need them can be an overwhelming challenge.

The good news: Jobs Caledon ? a service brought to you by Caledon Community Services ? is here to help!

We help employers access federal and provincial programs to offset the inevitable costs of building your dream team.

Wage Subsidies

There are several financial incentives available for employers to hire and provide on the job training, particularly for people between 15 and 30 years old. Employment Ontario offers an hourly wage subsidy through its Youth Job Connection programs. Similarly, Service Canada offers employers a wage subsidy through a program called LIFE for Youth.

The benefit for employers? Besides a wage subsidy, you get employees who have already received skills training and specialized coaching and who are job ready and eager to help your business succeed. These employees could be just who you've been searching for and the next member of your dream team.

Hiring Incentives

Also, check out Employing Young Talent Incentive (EYTI). This is a NEW government-funded program available through Jobs Caledon. Geared towards small to medium-sized businesses (under 100 employees), it helps young people find work AND offers participating businesses up to $2,000 per youth hired!

Training Grants

How can you get a jump on your competition? The Canada-Ontario Job Grant (COJG) provides direct financial support (up to $10,000 per employee) to acquire the training needed to keep your workforce skills current and up-to-date in a rapidly changing landscape. If you are a business with a plan to deliver short-term training to existing and new employees, contact Jobs Caledon.
