

Inglewood Farmers Market is going for another year

The grounds outside Lloyd Wilson Centennial Arena in Inglewood are going to be busy Wednesday evenings for the next couple of months. The Inglewood Farmers Market is up and going for another season. Inglewood area resident Doug Vivian was manning the Mrs. V. Preserves for his wife June 7.

Deborah Robillard runs this booth with her husband Andrew Sharko of Hidden Meadows Farm on Highway 10, north of Caledon village. They have various types of garlic available, as well as granola that she made, along with jams and chutney. Photos by Bill Rea

Kim Mounahan of Comolea Farms of Grand Valley was on hand with a variety of beef, cheese and butter products.
