

Watch where flood-relief money going

Ontario Provincial Police are advising people to be careful when it comes to giving money to charities helping victims of the recent flooding in central Ontario.

A number of communities have declared states of emergency as a result of the high water levels, and police report there are some individuals who may be attempting to fraudulently benefit from this.

OPP urge anyone wishing to support fundraising initiatives that may be underway or planned for the future make sure that they visit the websites of those communities that have been directly affected. These websites will assist with identifying how and where donations can be officially directed so that they make it to their intended destination and not into the wrong hands.
