Jones not planning to support last week's budget

By Bill Rea

Liberals are saying lots of positive things about the Provincial budget that was brought down last Thursday by Finance Minister Charles Sousa, but Dufferin-Caledon MPP Sylvia Jones isn't showing the same enthusiasm.

"I think it's terrible," she declared the following day.

The budget promotes a number of programs for young people, including a Youth Jobs Strategy of $295 million over two years to create jobs and mentorship opportunities; creating jobs through investments in infrastructure for public transit, roads, bridges, hospitals and schools; reducing auto insurance rates by 15 per cent on average for nine million drivers; helping 46,000 more people receive home and community care quickly; providing tax relief to small businesses to create more jobs by increasing their Employer Health Tax exemption from $400,000 to $450,000 of payroll; and taking steps to transform social assistance.

"The new government is committed to helping all the people of Ontario and to eliminating the deficit by 2017-18," Sousa commented. "By beating our fiscal targets, we can continue to invest in the things that matter most to people every day. We are protecting health care and education. We are creating job opportunities for youth. Our balanced approach to strengthening the economy will help create jobs and build a prosperous and fair Ontario for all."

On the other hand, there are concerns over the size of the Provincial deficit, which is reportedly to grow to $11.7 billion next year. The interest costs on the debt is slated to increase from $10.4 billion this year to $12.2 billion in 2015-16.

"I would say this meets the requests that the NDP put forward," Sousa was quoted as saying in Friday's Toronto Sun.

But Jones harkened to the Liberal government that she said wasted millions on things like eHealth and Ornge, not to mention $865 million it has cost to cancel two gas plants to win an extra couple of seats in the last election, "and even that isn't a final figure," she declared.

She said eHealth and Ornge could be dismissed as cases of poor oversight, but the gas plant issue "is a whole different level."

"It's so frustrating," she added. "They have admitted, 'Yes, it was a political decision.'"

Despite that, Jones charged the budget includes nearly $1 billion to answer NDP demands, and Ontarians can't afford that.

"It drives me crazy," she remarked.

Jones also said the Progressive Conservative Caucus at Queen's Park remains committed to not supporting the budget, charging he government "has utterly lost the moral authority to lead this province."

"It is clear that Premier (Kathleen) Wynne and her Liberal government are so desperate to hold on to power that they are willing to submit what is basically a budget dictated by the NDP," she added.

"The only thing that is Liberal about this budget is who delivered it," Jones observed. "It's got NDP written all over it. It's like they're ghost writers."

Jones also seemed mystified that the NDP could prop up the minority Liberal government, but she said she expects that is what will happen in light of the budget.

"I believe they will do what they did last budget," she remarked. "Basically sit on their hands."

"I was not elected to Queen's Park to sit on my hands," she added.

Local representatives from other parties were a little more positive in their responses.

"We're very happy that Kathleen Wynne seems to be working with the NDP and allow the NDP some influence over the budget," commented Karen Gventer, NDP candidate in Dufferin-Caledon in the 2011 election.

She added she was a little concerned that the budget didn't contain cost-saving measures the party had proposed, such as caps for the salaries of hospital CEOs.

"It means the budget really isn't as balanced as it could be, and as balanced as the NDP would like," she said.

"I appreciate that the Liberals are attempting to cooperate with the NDP to avoid an election less than two years after then last

Empowering women event Monday in Mississauga

Healthy Aging for Women will be the theme of an event aimed at empowerment planned for this coming Monday (May 13).

It will be held at the Mississauga Convention Centre, Monday May 13 from 7 to 9 p.m. and is being presented by Women of Wonder (WOW) Money Club - Promoting Financial Literacy for Women.

Nine out of 10 women are going to be on their own at some point. This is one of the driving forces that led Debbie Bullock of Deborah Bullock and Associates in Caledon East and her partners Denise Vitellaro Turner and Barbara Fuller to create a venue for women to learn about financial literacy in a way that they learn best; sharing with other women.

WOW is dedicated to educating women on all aspects of their lives and believe that "health is your wealth."

One is never too young or too old to start thinking about how to preserve and improve physical and mental well-being. Healthy aging is a lifelong process.

Dr. Vivien Brown, an international and national speaker on health prevention, wellness and women's health, will be speaking at this evening of empowerment, shopping and networking.

WOW has been running for more than a year. The club is totally confidential and no personal details are shared with the group. Everyone is there to learn in an environment in which they feel comfortable to ask questions regarding their financial lives, but didn't know where to go to find the answers.

To register for the event visit http://wowhealthyagingforwomen.eventbrite.ca

Tilson announced investment in Bolton's D&R Electronics

By Nick Fernandes

Dufferin-Caledon MP David Tilson showed his support for local businesses last week with a visit to D&R Electronics Co. in Bolton.

Tilson used the occasion to announce the government's investment of $50,000 via the Industrial Research Assistance Program (IRAP) run by the National Research Council.

"Our government's Economic Action Plan 2013 focuses on the drivers of growth and job creation — innovation, investment, education, skills and communities." Tilson said.

The investment will be going toward D&R's development of a Light Emitting Diode (LED) warning light system for emergency vehicles. These lights, which will be among the first to be manufactured in Canada, will be developed, built, and installed into vehicles all in house at the company's headquarters in Bolton.

These new LED lights will last longer than the light bulbs often used in first responder trucks and cars, and due to the rotating pattern of the light system, they will eliminate the need for motors with complex moving parts. Ontario police, ambulance, and fire departments that buy from D&R will be able to bring their vehicles to the company HQ to have the systems installed. D&R will also ship its LED systems to the United States, Australia, and England, among other countries.

The company also designs advanced computer hardware for use in vehicles. A demo police car shown to Tilson during the tour was outfitted with a dashboard computer, control system for the LED lights and a trunk compartment set up with shelving units and the computer's hard drive. Computers are being used in emergency vehicles more and more frequently in recent years, giving police, firemen and paramedics faster access to information in time-sensitive situations and a wider range of utility.

D&R electronics is run by the father and son team of Rinaldo and Alfredo Darolfi, who are heavily involved in the electronic and mechanical engineering sectors of their production line. All levels of development and construction for it's equipment will be handled in house, and will be bringing a wide range of employment opportunities from skilled labor to engineering jobs. D&R will be providing it's services directly to police departments throughout the province, bringing more advanced and cost effective equipment to Ontario's first responders.

Dufferin-Caledon MP David Tilson got a tour of D&R Electronics Co. Friday from Rinaldo and Alfredo Darolfi.

FTP seeks support for Mother's Day

With Mother's Day coming this weekend, Family Transition Place (FTP) is appealing for help to alleviate struggles of mothers dealing with domestic violence in the community.

The women's support organization is seeking donations to go toward maintaining programs and services essential for the FTP to help people in the area. Many programs in youth and women's services suffer from a lack of funding, and are always in need of contributions. FTP would be grateful for even small, monthly donations, which when built up over time can make a great difference.

Donations can be arranged over the phone by contacting Kelly Lee at 519-942-4122, ext. 243 or at kelly@familytransitionsplace.ca

Beware of dangers from warmer weather

Warm weather has returned, and the Central Region of OPP is asking motorists to be careful and watchful for cyclists, pedestrians of all ages and motorcycles.

Over the past few days, police have observed a marked increase in those who use roadways and highways and they are sad to report they have seen a number of serious collisions already that have involved motorcycles, including one that ended in a fatality early Saturday morning.

Outdoor enthusiasts who use the waterways are also reminded that the water is not only very cold, but may be moving faster due to the recent floods that covered a large portion of the area. Waterways of any size must be respected and safety equipment, including personal flotation devices (PFDs) and flotation suits, etc. is required.

Boaters should also be conscious of submerged hazards, which could include docks and other cottage property that may have simply floated away in the wake of the recent floods.

OPP ask everyone to take their time over the next few days and weeks, and remember that operating any motorized vehicle, vessel or bicycle requires a level of skill that for some may require some time to become re-acquainted with.

BUILDING BURNS NEAR VICTORIA
There were no injuries and damage is estimated at $50,000 after this building on Highway 10, just south of King Street, went up in flames Saturday morning. Caledon Fire and Emergency Services reports the call come in just after 9 a.m. Ten fire vehicles from the Snelgrove, Cheltenham, Inglewood, Caledon village and Caledon East stations and about 50 firefighters responded to the call. When they arrived, they found a two-storey building fully involved with flame. Crews established a tanker water shuttle system and started a defensive fire attack due to the advanced conditions. The structure collapsed just after 9:30 and the fire was brought under control at abut 9:40. The building was determined to be used for storage of a number of vehicles. The structure and its contents were a total loss. The cause was still under investigation by the fire department.

Prescription drug drop-off day

In response to growing concerns about the dangers of prescription drugs OPP are setting aside this Saturday (May 11) to take in stray medications for disposal.

Caledon OPP will be taking part in this program. Constable Brenda Evans said people can drop off old prescription drugs at the station at 15924 Innis Lake Rd. between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

"Ontarians are among the highest users of prescription medications containing narcotics in the country," said OPP Commissioner Chris Lewis in a release. "The number of deaths has risen due to drug misuse; often, young people will use medications found in their home medicine cabinets to 'get high'. On May 11, police and medical officials will work together to combat this serious public health threat."

The province-wide program will give people with unused or outdated drugs of all varieties a chance to make sure their prescriptions are disposed of by the right hands and not subject to misuse and abuse.

All submissions made will be anonymous and it will not be required to have the original labelling on the medication. All collected medications will be incinerated in a safe and environmentally-friendly manner.

Painkillers and other medications are often used for non-medical recreational use by youth, and police aim to curb the frequency that drugs are found within the home. The drop-off also helps to keep harmful substances out of landfills and waterways.

Morrison liked some of what she saw in last week's budget

By Bill Rea

Mayor Marolyn Morrison saw some items she liked in the Provincial budget brought down last Thursday by Finance Minister Charles Sousa, but she said she has concerns too.

"I think there are some good things, but there are a few things that aren't good for municipalities," she said.

"It continues to honour the uploading agreement that was signed by all the municipalities by AMO (Association of Municipalities of Ontario)," Morrison commented the following day.

There are provisions for infrastructure funding for municipalities, and Morrison said Peel Region is likely to get some of that money, although she acknowledged not much is going to go into Caledon's coffers.

She also commented that Sousa sees the need to prevent further pressures being imposed on the property tax payers.

Morrison was also pleased to see support for public transit. She noted that doesn't impact Caledon much now, it will some day.

"Maybe that means the 427 will get finished," she remarked.

As well, she observed there be a review of the assessment appeal timelines. If the Province is committed to local food and food security, then something needs to be done for the agricultural sector.

On the negative side, she pointed to the plan to take $25 million away from the Ontario Municipal Partnership Fund in 2014. She said that's causing concern with AMO.

"That's horrible," she declared. "I don't think they thought this through when they did it."

In addition, Morrison said social assistance costs for the Region will increase in 2014.

"That's not a good thing," she said.

Agencies have differing views on last week's budget

By Nick Fernandes

Not surprisingly, reaction is mixed to the Provincial budget brought down last week by Finance Minister Charles Sousa.

And the varying opinions included several agencies that issued comments and statements shortly after it was introduced.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) and the Ontario Coalition Against Poverty (OCAP) commented that the new budget is not only insufficient to make a difference in people's lives, but also that it is actively insulting to thousands of people living with poverty. OCAP rep Liisa Schofield cited a disparity between the continued annual $8.5 billion tax cuts for corporations with the $14 rate increase and $200 earnings exemption, saying social assistance rates would need to be increase by 55 per cent "just to recover the lost ground of the past 18 years."

Ontario Federation of Labour (OFL) President Sid Ryan was more optimistic about the social assistance measures, but said that continuing to uphold Dalton McGuinty's frugal policies will do nothing for economic growth and impose budget cuts on public services such as schools and hospitals. While Ryan praised the fact that the government of Premier Kathleen Wynne seems to be listening to Ontarians, he said that a more ambitious plan is needed.

The Canadian Auto Workers Union (CAW) and Communications Energy and Paperworkers Union (CEP) both voiced approval of the budget, stating that it reflects a change of gears for Ontario fiscal policy that will see a bigger emphasis in the well being of citizens and families. The leaders of the two unions also called attention to the influence the NDP had in forming the budget, citing this as an example of the potential of minority parties.

The Ontario Home Care Association welcomed the measures in the budget to increase funding for home care. The Association stated that the one per cent increase, which will account for $700 million in two years, will go a long way toward providing support and care for aging Ontarians. The stance towards home care runs parallel to several other pieces of legislation, such as the Excellent Care for All Act and Seniors Strategy for Ontario.

The Ontario Chamber of Commerce (OCC) called the budget a "mixed bag" in terms of commercial potential. OCC applauded measures that can improve competitivenesss, such as the upholding of the Corporate Income Tax rate and the extension of the Capital Cost Allowance for manufacturers. But OCC also disapproved of the lack of a plan to overhaul service delivery business models, and voiced concerns over the government moving in to regulate auto insurance pricing without evidence of monopoly or collusion.

President Warren "Smokey" Thomas of the Ontario Public Service Employees Union directly refered to the budget as a continuation of the McGuinty legacy. He commented that the enhancements to public services and youth employment programs are funded entirely by cuts in other public services. "This budget is a missed opportunity to restore tax fairness in Ontario and make corporations part of the process," he said, voicing concern about Ontarians taking wage cuts or losing their jobs while corporations get tax breaks.

The largest teacher federation in Canada, the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario (EFTO), welcomed the budget as movement away from past austerity policies. ETFO president Sam Hammond referred to the steps taken as "small but encouraging," calling attention to the jobs program to reduce Ontario's 50 per cent unemployment rate among youth and the social assistance programs for First provincial election," commented Paula Conning, who is slated to carry the Green Party colours in the next election in this riding. "However, with the Conservatives refusing to participate, the taxpayers of Ontario are burdened with yet another overspending plan that neglects the major restructuring that is required to maintain strong and effective front line services while reducing waste."

Conning cited the example that Wynne commented as far back as 2007 that it's unfair and fiscally wasteful to have parallel Catholic and public school systems. "Yet now that she is in a leadership position, she isn't making the changes she knows are necessary," Conning observed.

Lori Holloway, who was the Liberal candidate in Dufferin-Caledon in 2011, was unavailable for comment.

Caledon Hills Bruce Trail Club is on the move

The Caledon Hills Bruce Trail Club is celebrating the acquisition of new land in the Hockley Valley.

More than 3,000 people were out recently for a fundraising event. Hike leaders led a variety of walks through the property, followed by a barbecue lunch donated by local real estate agent Chris Richie and Harmony Whole Foods. In excess of $10,000 was.

Cedar Highlands, a former ski resort, offers beautiful vistas to the north, mature hardwood trees and wooded ravines. In the next few months the planned reroute will follow some of the ski runs long since abandoned, and connect to the trail on the East side of Airport Road, about six kilometres north of Highway 9.

The Cheltenham Badlands and the Devil's Pulpit are two other popular features in the section of the trail.

Securing the optimum hiking corridor from Tobermory to Niagara is the goal of the Bruce Trail Conservancy. Members are familiar with updates to the trail which occur due to the acquisition of new land. A significant portion of the trail still relies on existing roads and the generosity of private owners who give permission to use their property. This is a temporary solution until the club can acquire complete ownership of the route.

In 2012, the Conservancy celebrated its 50th Anniversary. During that year, five new nature preserves were acquired through private donations, protecting close to 300 acres of natural Escarpment landscape.

Next year will see a celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Caledon Hills Club.

Donations will go to support the ongoing delivery of the agency's SMILE exercise program, hot and frozen nutritious meal delivery services and social gatherings programs, which help more than 450 Caledon and Orangeville area residents maintain their independence and keep them healthy, active and able to live their lives.

Celebrate Museum Month of PAMA

May is Museum Month and the Peel Art Gallery Museum and Archives (PAMA) will be taking the entire month to celebrate local culture and history in a program geared towards the region's youth.

Peel families have already participated in the Water Power Family Workshop, which gave parents and children hands-on learning with water experiments. And a Pay-What-You-Can Concert featuring Toronto guitarist Derek Macrae and his covers of Beatles and Elton John hits.

Tonight (Thursday) there will be a public tour of the PAMA starting at 7 p.m. The tour will run for a half hour and include most of the major buildings, exhibits and artifacts in the museum. The tours will continue to run every Thursday for the rest of the month.

This coming weekend, starting Friday and running into Saturday, there will be a Mother's Day event where visitors will be given the materials to make cards for their special someone.

Both pop-up cards and fixed-medium cards will be made at different times in the day. This event will cost $22.50 per family.

This weekend will also signal the start of the Art from the Inside Out exhibit; made to raise awareness for the struggles of youth and adult ex-convicts and their struggles to reintegrate with society. This particular exhibit, hosted by the Bridge criminal offender outreach program, will go until July 7.

The halfway point of the month will come with the Guess Who's Coming to Peel free activity May 18 and 19, which will teach families about immigration and migration to Peel in particular.

The month will come to a close with a Medicine Wheel making workshop May 25 from 1 to 5 p.m., and the day after there will be a 2 p.m. rock hunting adventure to teach about the regions geology.

For the duration of the month, all admission for children up to the age of 12 will be free except for the Mother's Day workshop, all events will be taking place at the PAMA in Brampton.

Domestic violence addressed at Lifetree Café

The cycle of domestic violence will be explored at the next Lifetree Café session May 15, from 7 to 8 p.m. at St. James' Church in Caledon East.

The program, entitled When Love Hurts: Ending the Cycle of Domestic Violence, will provide practical strategies for removing those suffering domestic violence from their abusive situations.

Lifetree representative Craig Cable said one in four women experiences domestic abuse, and one in nine men is a victim of abuse.

"There are help and hope," he said. "Both women and men can survive domestic violence."

Admission to this event is free. Snacks and beverages will be available. The church is at 6025 Old Church Rd.

Looks like no election over this budget

Granted, it's a little soon to say for sure, and things can change rapidly in the world of politics, but it's beginning to look very much like the minority Liberal government of Premier Kathleen Wynne is going to be around for at least the next little while.

We base that on the simple fact that recent opinion polls indicate Ontarians do not want an election. That means there's a certain amount of concern that the parties forcing unwanted elections might have to face very angry voters.

On the other hand, moods can change, as people reflect on some of the issues facing the government.

It's clear that last week's budget reflected a major effort on the part of the Grits to woo the support of the NDP. Finance Minister Charles Sousa said as much when he was quoted in Friday's Toronto Sun as saying, "I would say this meets the requests that the NDP put forward."

In this particular case, the decision on whether to have an election rests mainly with NDP Leader Andrea Horwath, and she's going to do what a party leader is supposed to do, mainly act in the best interests of her party.

That raises a more subtle question, namely who's governing this province? Ontario voters didn't give absolute power to the Liberals in the last election, but they certainly didn't give it to Horwath and company either.

It's been well known that poll numbers can change quickly, and as it becomes clearer just how much public money was wasted on cancelling these gas plants, we just have to wonder how forgiving the voters are going to be.

Councillor corrects error

In regard to the discussion of Brampton Brick's proposal for the importation of fill into their mined out location on Mississauga Road, I misspoke at last Tuesday's (April 30) council meeting.

Just a week prior to the council meeting, I attended a tour of the Lafarge operations and was told what the Lafarge procedure was for fill entering their sites. Since the meeting last Tuesday, I have gone back and checked with Lafarge in regard to their requirements for the importation of topsoil for rehabilitation of their pits.

All topsoil going to Lafarge sites is inspected at its origin according to Ministry of the Environment (MOE) regulations. In addition, Lafarge independently takes a sample every 1,000 cubic metres in the field before the topsoil is moved. When the topsoil arrives in the pit, Lafarge samples every 70th load arriving or about one in 700 cubic metres.

I was incorrect in stating that every fifth load was tested. I apologize for my error.

Proposal for Animal Shelter Working Group

In the April 17 edition of the Caledon Citizen, there was a story about the Town of Caledon's plans to change its Animal Control Bylaw.

Apparently, the Town hosted a public information meeting on the matter, but there was little public comment at the meeting. I found the lack of public input most unfortunate, considering the number of pet owners in Caledon who are affected by the animal bylaws.

As the Town is not scheduling any more public meetings, I would like to suggest that anyone interested in commenting on the changes, or participating in a citizens' Animal Shelter Working Group, contact me at rjburr@idirect.com with their comments and/or suggestions. If enough people are interested, we could organize our own meeting to discuss both the proposed changes to the bylaws and other changes that people would like to see. We could then make our own presentation directly to council.

As I understand it, the revised bylaw might be presented to council as early as the May 28 meeting, and so it is important that anyone who is interested contact me as soon as possible.

I'm not going to Mars

Bill Rea

Those who know me know that I have always been a fan of the space program and space exploration, and I hope I will be until the day of my death.

Like most boys who grew up in the 1960s (and probably lots of girls too), I had dreams of being an astronaut. And I was born early enough that the thought of being the first man on the moon crossed my mind a couple of times. I was only a little put out when the late Neil Armstrong beat me to it.

And I was at the right age at the right time to idolize the likes of Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock, and accept that the idea of space exploration might be realistic. I was indeed lucky to have been around at a time when imagination in such direction was indulged.

But alas, there is also reality.

There are those in our society who speak ill of space exploration, wondering why we bother with it, especially since there are so many problems here at home that need to be sorted out before we turn humanity into a galactic roadshow.

It's a hostile environment beyond the outer stratosphere. Without specialized and meticulously designed equipment, the life expectancy of a person in the conditions that exist away from Earth would be roughly the duration of the average hiccup. It's dangerous out there, as a number of star voyagers have learned the hard way.

I attended a breakfast meeting a couple of weeks ago, at which the keynote speaker was a man who, among other accomplishments, had stood at the summit of Mount Everest, the highest piece of land on Earth.

His endeavour took a lot of time and planning. So does space exploration. If you're entertaining thoughts of getting to the top of Everest, you had better have a lot of money behind you. No one ever said mucking about in outer space didn't gobble up a lot of scratch. There are dead human bodies on the slopes of Everest, and they are likely to stay there. Exploration of outer space has claimed a number of lives.

So why should people want to explore outer space? I think it's got a lot to do with the traditional reason why people give to explain why they would want to get to the top of Mount Everest: Because it's there!

I can think of a lot of other great reasons for space exploration, but that one does just fine for now.

Thus I was intrigued recently when I heard there is a recruitment effort for people to take the first manned trip to Mars.

The project is known as Mars One. According to its website (http://mars-one.com), it's a not-for-profit organization with the ambition of establishing a human settlement on that red planet. The effort will use existing and available technology, evidently gleaned from all over the world.

Apparently, the project is accepting applicants from people interested in making the trip, and it's obvious the demands are going to be considerable. Since this will be the first human settlement on Mars, there's going to be an enormous amount of development and upkeep involved. The website is clear (I would say confirmed by common sense) that there are going to problems that need to be solved, including some that have not yet even been foreseen. This is going to be a job for some exceptionally exceptional people, in terms of intelligence, creativity, physical health and psychological stability, not to mention pure guts (I guess I'm over-qualified).

"Throughout the astronaut selection program, Mars One will select applicants who have good physical and mental health and show five key character traits: Resilience, adaptability, curiosity, ability to trust others and creativity/resourcefulness," the website says.

So I think it's obvious that getting this expedition to Mars is going to be complicated.

On the other hand, the plans for the trip home are a model of simplicity.

There are no such plans. Not only is it a one-shot deal, it's one way. If you take this trip to Mars, you're going to stay on Mars for the rest of your life (notice I didn't use the words "earthly existence").

Those behind Mars One are being very up-front about that.

"A grounded, deep sense of purpose will help each astronaut maintain his or her psychological stability and focus as they work together toward a shared and better future," the website states.

So would you sign up for a trip like this?

I'm not planning to seek a spot on this trip, if for no other reason than my wife would never let me go. Besides, it's going to be some years before departure, meaning I'll probably be in my mid 60s at "blast-off" time. I don't fancy the thought of being the first Martian patriarch.

I grant it seems strange that anyone would sign up for a trip like this, but there is interest. According to a BBC report I read, more than 30,000 people had put up a 30-euro deposit, which I guess is the start of the application process, by the end of April, and the indications were money was still coming in.

I'm going to assume this project is legit, although the possibility that it might be a scam has occurred to me.

It probably strikes most of us as inconceivable that any relatively young person would sign up for something like this. But maybe we should cast our minds back several hundred years, when men signed up for voyages across a sea when they really didn't know what they were going to bump into. Is it not a fact that Christopher Columbus was trying to get to Asia when he encountered this island on which we reside?

How many young men left their mothers to go on trips to unexplored areas? How many of them opted to spend the rest of their lives in strange lands?

True, that environment wasn't nearly as hostile as outer space, or Mars. But these guys couldn't have known that. For all they knew, those trips could have ended with them falling off the edge of this flat Earth on which we live.

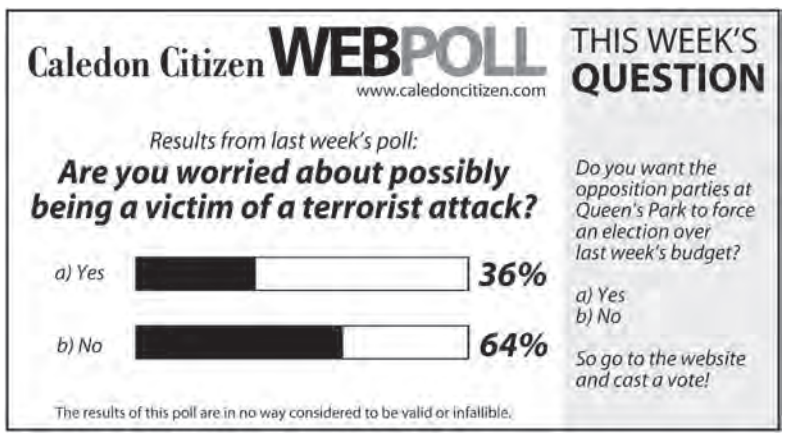

If the human race is going to further explore space, then the effort has to start at some point, and if anyone has a better idea, then let's hear it.

For many years, fiction writers had a lot of fun coming up with stories about Martians invading Earth. Now there's talk about us invading Mars, although the word "colonizing" is probably more accurate (I'll reserve judgment, for the moment, if that word is also appropriate).

But it is a fact that inhabitants of no other planet, at least to our knowledge, have shown an interest in colonizing Mars. So why not people from Earth?

And why should we be interested in colonizing Mars? For the same reason people climb Mount Everest.

Because it's there!

Federal government is working on putting victims' rights first

Ottawa Journal

David Tilson
MP Dufferin-Caledon

Recently, Prime Minister Stephen Harper launched the eighth annual National Victims of Crime Awareness Week.

This week recognizes the progress made by victims' rights groups across the country to help make the Canadian criminal justice system more responsive to their needs.

Our government has a long history of standing up for victims and supporting their rights. In 2007, we created the Office of the Federal Ombudsman for Victims of Crime, an office solely dedicated to ensuring that victims have a voice and a resource in Ottawa. We also created the Federal Victims Strategy, a package of programs and services that help give victims a voice in the criminal justice system. In addition, we doubled the compensation that convicted criminals must pay to victims.

However, there's still more work to be done. The theme for this year's National Victims of Crime Awareness Week is We All Have a Role. Our government is doing its part and implementing more measures that will build on our previous accomplishments.

We've announced more than $1.5 million in funding for more than 175 projects across the country that will serve the interests of victims. These projects will help raise awareness about the needs of victims, the role the public can play, and how we can end the stigmatization of victims.

Our government has also begun consultations for our Victims Bill of Rights. These consultations are critical so that we can identify the best way to ensure that victims' rights are properly entrenched into federal law. Doing so will ensure that federal law responds to the rights and needs of victims of crime.

Additionally, James Bezan has taken further steps to help ensure that the criminal justice system takes victims' needs into account by introducing the Respecting Families of Murdered and Brutalized Persons Act. This private member's bill will empower courts to increase the ineligibility date for Canada's most depraved criminals.

Normally, these criminals are technically eligible for parole after 25 years. However, due to the nature of their crimes, their parole is never granted. However, the families of victims are still brought in to unnecessary and bureaucratic parole hearings, forced to relive their experiences for absolutely no reason.

This bill will allow courts to push parole eligibility from 25 years to 40 years. This will eliminate unnecessary parole hearings for people who will never be granted parole and will save victims' families the unnecessary pain of having to relive the experience.

Victims of crime deserve to have a voice in the criminal justice process. The unfortunate reality is that far too often, victims are left behind and forgotten. The particularly sad case of Rehtaeh Parsons highlights the need for strengthening the voices of victims and their families, and supporting their rights.

This is why our government will continue to take action and help ensure that the Canadian justice system puts the rights of victims first.

Strengthening health care in rural communities

Canadians can understand how a country as vast and sparsely populated as ours presents unique challenges when it comes to providing quality health care services in close proximity to every citizen.

On the other hand, the financial costs of medical schooling are discouraging for many aspiring doctors and nurses. The fact is Canada needs more doctors and nurses.

Our government announced a new initiative as part of our Economic Action Plan to address these concerns. Our plan is not only to help strengthen primary healthcare services in rural communities, but also to help alleviate the high cost of education and training. This action is to embrace partial Canada Student Loan forgiveness for family doctors, nurse practitioners and nurses who work in underserved rural or remote communities.

More specifically, family doctors and residents in family medicine who begin working in a designated community will be eligible for loan forgiveness of up to $8,000 per year (to a maximum of $40,000). Under similar stipulations, nurse practitioners and nurses will be eligible for forgiveness of up to $4,000 per year (to a maximum of $20,000). The loan forgiveness applicant must have been employed (full-time, part-time or casual) for at least 12 months, and must have provided in-person services for a minimum of 400 hours (or 50 days) in that community. Eligible communities include most of those with a population of 50,000 or less, including communities that provide health services to First Nations, Inuit and Métis populations. These benefits are now available to applicants.

Encouraging more doctors and nurses to work in the rural communities that need them most is just the latest way our government is taking action for the health of Canadians and their families. This builds on our previous action of increasing provincial health care transfers to record levels.

We are increasing funding by six per cent per year over the next three years, ensuring that support for our health care system is balanced and sustainable. This is reliable action that will help preserve health care in Canada over the long-term.

Our government has been clear — Canadians deserve the very best with respect to accessible and quality health care. By partially forgiving loans for our hard-working doctors and nurses in Canada, we're taking action to strengthen the health care system and improve the health of all Canadians.

A case of misleading statistics

Claire Hoy
National Affairs

It was Benjamin Disraeli who first uttered the oft-quoted observation, "There are three kinds of lies; lies, damn lies, and statistics."

That famous quote came to mind recently when the Richard Lapchick's Institute for Diversity and Ethics in Sports at the University of Central Florida released its annual report – usually received uncritically by the media – which purports to show that more than six decades after Jackie Robinson heroically broke the colour line in major league baseball, the game isn't attracting as many U.S.-born black players as it once did.

The inference, of course, is that an unspoken form of underground racism is still alive and well among MLB owners, general managers and coaches, as if somehow a baseball executive would turn away from a great ballplayer who happens to be black.

The notion is totally absurd on the face of it. Worse, Lapchick uses – should we say abuses – statistics to make his annual case.

To be sure, he derives tons of publicity out of it. Even normally critical sports analysts – and others – routinely fall for the predetermined thesis that says major league baseball is turning its collective back on U.S.-born black players.

Where to begin?

First of all, in case you're wondering, I'm a big-time baseball fan. All my life I've cheered for the New York Yankees, and still do. Baseball has always been – and remains – my favourite sport.

To be sure, it does have some problems, the undue length of games being the main one. But racial diversity is not one of their problems. Indeed, if you look at all the facts – rather than the selective "facts" offered by this annual report – you'll discover than when it comes to racial diversity, there isn't a sport in the world that even comes close to matching baseball.

The "fact" that garners all the headlines in this annual sham is Lapchick's observation that the number of U.S.-born black ballplayers is down from what it once was. This is true, although not as true as Lapchick claims. It's also irrelevant to the argument of diversity, but we'll get back to that in a moment.

His report claims that the current number of U.S.-born black players represents just 8.5 per cent of all players, down from a high of 27 per cent.

On first blush, that seems like a huge drop. And while it has dropped – and the reasons for that have nothing to do with racism and everything to do with inner-city black kids opting more for basketball and football – the truth is, the number of U.S.-born black players was NEVER at 27 per cent.

That number comes from earlier counts of all black players, not just U.S.-born players, which includes Latino players such as Rico Carty, a Dominican, whom you may remember as a Toronto Blue Jay back in the late 1970s.

Mark Amour, a member of the Society of American Baseball Research, has done extensive studies on blacks in baseball. He figures the number of U.S.-born blacks in baseball peaked at 19 percent in the 1980s, so there is no doubt that the current 8.5 percent is a big drop.

Then again, the number of white U.S.-born major league baseball players has also dropped considerably, a fact which rarely gets mentioned but is accounted for by many of the same reasons there are fewer U.S.-born black players. So what's the main reason, you ask? Simple, the number of players born outside the U.S. has skyrocketed in the past couple of decades – including the current pool of 17 Canadian-born players, a far cry from the days when Canada's only Hall of Fame player, Fergie Jenkins, pitched his heart out for the Phillies, Cubs, Rangers and Red Sox.

Early last month, MLB announced that there were 241 players on the 2013 opening day rosters – or 28.2 percent of the total – who were born outside the U.S., the second highest total ever.

Lapchick, who frets about the decline of U.S.-born blacks in baseball, also issues numbers about other sports but seemingly has no problem with those. Indeed, he pointed out that in 2011 the National Basketball Association, which at one time was overwhelmingly white, is composed of 83 per cent non-white players and just 17 per cent white, a precipitous decline from earlier years. Same thing for NFL football, where the rosters are about 60 percent non-white. Compare that to the U.S. general population, which is just 34 percent non-white and, if you were so inclined, you could argue both basketball and football are discriminating against whites.

These numbers, of course, don't make a case for discrimination at all. But they do illustrate that Disraeli knew what he was talking about when he pointed out what those with an agenda can do with statistics.

It's just a pity that those reporting on them wouldn't be a tad more diligent.

Thanks for supporting masquerade gala

The Caledon East Revitalization Committee would like to take this opportunity to express our sincere appreciation to the residents of Caledon for making the 2013 Valentine's Masquerade Gala a huge and wonderful success.

In our third year, we have once again been fortunate to have a wonderful giving community. Feb. 15, 170 attendees had a wonderful dinner at the Royal Ambassador, and danced the night away to the Aaron Garner Band, lead by our handsome MC Paul James, host of Country Music Television. Our silent auction raised $4,207 and the raffle raised $1,380. Overall, we finished the evening making $17,229.25 to put directly back into revitalization projects in downtown Caledon East.

We would like to extend a special thank you to Danila and Lucy from Scotiabank, who contributed a donation of $2,500. We also acknowledge other local businesses and organizations who contributed to the success of this event — Aromatouch Day Spa, Caledon East Audio Visual, Caledon East Children's Place Daycare, Caledon East Family Chiropractic, Caledon East and District Historical Society, Caledon JKA-Karate, Carusi's Hair Salon, Core Solutions Physiotherapy and Wellness, Crumps Naturals, Hummingbird Flower and Gifts, the Prudential — Verona Teskey, Dalerose Homes, Brookfield Homes, Royal Bank, Dr. Sylvia King, Dufferin Glen Golf, Foodland, Glen Echo Nurseries, Gourmandissimo Catering and Fine Food Shop, Best Western Plus Orangeville Inn and Suites, In Key Music, Inspirations, Bloom Fashion Boutique, Log Home Dental, Mansfield Ski Club, Bolton Toyota, Merkley Design, POP Painting, Pete Paterson Photography, Rock Garden Farms, the Royal Ambassador, Town of Caledon, Yoga Shala Caledon, Royal Lepage RCR Realty, Stewart McGuire's, Your Eye on Photo, 4Cats Art Studio, One King West Hotel, Erica Pratt, the Naked Vine, Urban Barnhouse, Via Trailers, Water Roots Day Spa, CIBC, Tom's Family Restaurant, Automotive Maintenance, MD Professional Services, Crozier and Associates, and PharmaSave. RETURN TO DISCO

There was a '70s feel at the Royal Ambassador Events Centre recently as the community gathered for a fundraiser to benefit St. Cornelius Catholic School in Caledon East. Teacher Tony Hayes and his wife Donna were looking over the silent auction items.

Junior C Bandits in exhibition play

Written By BRIAN LOCKHART

The Caledon Bandits Junior C Lacrosse club had a chance to see how the squad is shaping up in a pre-season game against the Newmarket Saints at the Bolton arena last Thursday.

Head Coach Mike Gillian said it was their first test, as well as the chance to see what they have heading into the season.

Although it won't count for the season record, the Bandits came out on top, winning 7-5 over the visitors after playing to a third-period tie when the Saints scored twice to make it an even game at five.

The Bandits were scheduled to play their first game yesterday (Wednesday) against Halton Hills (results not known at press time), followed by a second road game against Mimico tomorrow (Friday).

With the short time left before the start of the season, Gillian said the roster still wasn't finalized by the end of last week's exhibition game.

"Me and coaches will talk it over and make some decisions," he said. "It's tough being in Junior C. We've got a lot of kids that want to play at a higher level."

Even so, there are a lot of players who won't make an A or B squad and will come knocking at the Bandits' door later.

The squad has "nine or 10" returning players this season, he said.

"We lost a big chunk of our defensive core," Gillian added.

Several players have moved on to other things since last season, but the coach said the offensive side of the team looks solid.

"Last year, we finished first in the division, but didn't get past the second round," he observed, adding the team got better as the season went on. "After a few games, the players bought into the system."

The Ontario Junior C Lacrosse League has 16 teams playing in two divisions, with the Bandits in the West division.

The two divisions won't meet during regular-season play, so the first time the Bolton team will meet squads from the East division will be in the playoffs.

The Bandits' home opener is scheduled for this coming Tuesday (May 14) at Mayfield Arena, when they will host the Shelburne Vets.

Game time is 8 p.m.

Opening day on the courts

The nets are up, the wind breaks are in place and the courts are cleared of winter debris.

The Bolton Tennis club had opening day for the season Saturday, and around 45 members turned out to play their first outdoor games.

"This club is run by volunteers and it runs better because of that," said club president Andre "Barney" Seguin. "If it wasn't for eight or 10 core people, we wouldn't have a club. We have a stewardship agreement with the Town of Caledon that is renewed every few years and it works very well."

Tennis players Robert Maciag and Natalie Murray wait for the return during a game on the courts at the Bolton Tennis Club. The club had its opening day for the season Saturday.

The club has now been operating for about 30 years, thanks to a lot of hard work and continuous improvement. Many who have been in the area for a long time remember when there was a ski hill and swimming pool in the park. The hill is now covered with trees and the swimming pool has long been filled in and buried under the soccer pitches.

"The club was refurbished when the park went into disrepair," Seguin explained while pointing out the fencing that had fallen down and was upright and repaired. "We had fist sized holes on the playing surface."

Over the years, the club has made improvements, including building the club house, deck and installing a roof over the deck to shelter it from the sun and rain.

All the courts were filled opening day by seasoned players and some new to the sport.

The Club also has visits from several local high schools, who use the courts for practise.

Volunteers make the difference in keeping the club and courts active and social.

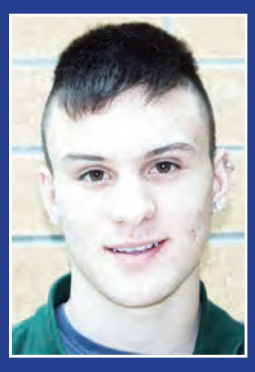

"This is a community club," Seguin said, "It's all community driven."

Peel Region paramedics bring home the gold from competition, again

For the second year in a row, Peel Paramedics Alicia Wuebbolt and Rebecca Firth took top spot in the primary care division at the National Paramedic Competition at Durham College in Whitby.

The annual skills competition is an opportunity to acknowledge the medical expertise paramedics bring to their patients.

"We're extremely proud of Alicia's and Rebecca's second win," Paramedic Chief Peter Dundas said. "Involvement in a skill competition like this is a testament to the commitment our paramedics have for both the profession and the people they care for."

Thirty-six teams, including four from the Netherlands, competed in the advanced care, primary care or student paramedic divisions of the competition. Each completed five rescue scenarios which included every-day calls to extreme emergencies, plus an academic exercise.

"Participating gives us a chance to learn different tricks of the trade from other paramedics," Wuebbolt observed. "Rebecca and I work well as a team and we're grateful for our instructors, who are dedicated to helping us develop our skills."

Joel D'Eath and Jeff Meadows represented Peel Regional Paramedic Services well in the advanced care paramedic division.

Since 2003, teams from across Canada and Europe have competed in the one-day, skill-testing event. For more information, visit paramediccompetition.ca

Peel Paramedics respond to more than 92,000 emergency medical calls every year. For more information about Peel Regional Paramedic Services, visit peelregion.ca/paramedics.

Olympian Annamay Pierse will be in Kids of Steel

For nearly 20 years, Edmonton's Annamay Pierse has had a love affair with the water.

Putting in eight to 10 swims, totalling more than 50 kilometres, per week, the 29-year-old athlete dreamed of going to the Olympics, finishing sixth in the 200-metre breaststroke in the 2012 Games in London. For more than two years, she held the world record at that distance.

With four younger sisters, who all swim on the national team, Pierse has been a leader for the family. Now living in Toronto with her Olympic paddling boyfriend (bronze medalist Mark Oldershaw), she has decided to give the new sport of triathlon a try.

Pierse will be in Caledon May 26 to race in the 13th Annual C3 Kinetico Kids Of Steel Triathlon.

"My family and I have been involved in the Edmonton Kinetico Kids of Steel Triathlon and I have been looking for a new sport to stay active in, so I am excited about coming to Caledon and getting involved with one of the biggest family triathlons in the country," she said.

Pierse is well aware that the Kids of Steel Races were designed to bring families together to exercise and have a great social day.

"I love the fact that Barrie Shepley and the C3 gang have been committed to putting on this race for 13 years, and that so many community volunteers get involved in the event," she added.

Annamay Pierse

The 13th annual C3 KOS Triathlon will is open to all ages, from three to 75 and everyone in between. The event takes place at Caledon Central Public School on Kennedy Road. The day's biggest category is the one for kids aged three to six, in which children can use a life-jacket, ride on their four wheel tricycles and jog 200 metres to the finish line. It's also possible to do the event as a family, getting one swimmer, one biker and one runner and make up a relay team.

Pierse will be available to sign autographs after she does her first C3 KOS Triathlon race herself.

Details to register and volunteer are at www.c3online.ca

CVC hosting community tree planting event in Caledon Saturday

Those with green thumbs will soon have the chance to exercise them.

Credit Valley Conservation (CVC) is hosting a community tree planting event this Saturday (May 11) in Caledon village.

It will run from 9 a.m. to noon on the north side of Charleston Sideroad, between Highway 10 and Kennedy Road. Participants are asked to park on Avellino Court, which runs east off of Chester Drive. They will plant native trees and shrubs to increase forest cover. Trees beautify the landscape, improve air quality and provide habitat for local wildlife.

No planting experience is needed. CVC staff will provide tree planting demonstrations. Students are encouraged to participate and earn their community volunteer hours.

"This is an opportunity for families to get outside, connect with nature and do their part for the local environment," said CVC Director of Restoration and Stewardship Mike Puddister. "Spring is finally here and this is a great way for families and individuals to enjoy the outdoors."

Participants should dress for the weather, and wear long pants and safety boots if possible. Shovels and gloves are provided but extras would be helpful. Light refreshments and snacks will be offered after the tree planting.

This event is in partnership with the Town of Caledon, Izaak Walton Flying Club, Ontario Streams and Halton-Peel Woodlands and Wildlife Stewardship.

For more information, contact CVC's Assistant Program Coordinator of Community Outreach Lindsey Jennings at 905-670-1615, ext. 445, or at ljennings@creditvalleyca.ca

Proceeds directed towards Osler redevelopment initiatives

Some of the greatest players in Toronto Maple Leaf history suited up and played for a cause recently in an epic match against the Osler Crusaders.

"Hockey Night for Osler is significant, both in terms of its popularity and the difference that it makes for the 600,000 patients plus their families who receive care each year at Brampton Civic, Etobicoke General and soon, the new Peel Memorial Centre for Integrated Health and Wellness," said William Osler Health System Foundation President and CEO Ken Mayhew. "Special thanks and congratulations must be paid to our sponsors, Brampton-Bramalea Kinsmen, Carillion Services and CIBC, our event Co-Chairs, Jamie Slade, from Carillion Services and Chris Richard from Osler, and to the many volunteers who help to make this event such a success for everyone who attends."

The charity hockey game raised $67,500, of which Osler hospitals will receive the net proceeds. In addition to ticket sales, money was raised through a silent auction and personal donations from Osler Crusader players who had funds pledged for the opportunity to play in the charity match.

"To have the opportunity to see legends like Johnny Bower and Darryl Sittler in our community, helping raise money for our hospitals was exciting and certainly something we won t forget," said William Osler Health System President and CEO Matthew Anderson. "Their support, along with the generosity of our community will go a long way in helping further the redevelopment of Peel Memorial and Etobicoke General, and fund the next generation of diagnostic equipment and technology at Brampton Civic Hospital."

Helping out with the puck drop were Simon Buttery of Carillion Services; Shawn Evans of CIBC; Osler President and CEO Matthew Anderson; Osler Foundation President and CEO Ken Mayhew; and Derek Dawson of the Brampton-Bramalea Kinsmen.
