Peter MacKay makes campaign stop in Caledon, backs Seeback's plan to improve rural internet

Written By MIKE BAKER

Conservative leadership frontrunner Peter MacKay has vowed to work alongside Dufferin-Caledon MP Kyle Seeback to bring even the most rural of areas of Canada into the 21st century, by improving high-speed internet nationwide.

Speaking at a campaign event in Caledon on Saturday morning, Mr. MacKay expressed his belief that the federal government needed to "embrace technology in ways that we have never done before" if Canada is to emerge favourably from the COVID-19 pandemic.

"These are the jobs of the future. We have some of the greatest minds, greatest entrepreneurs, and greatest opportunities, who have left for better opportunities overseas," Mr. MacKay said. "As part of that recognition and promotion of technology, we need to have high-speed internet everywhere. We need to reach into the most remote parts of Canada to see that they are connected, not only for business purposes, but for health purposes, mental health purposes and to establish greater communication nationwide."

Mr. Seeback has been quite outspoken in recent months, discussing the issue on several occasions with the Citizen. Since his election last fall, he says he's heard from dozens of residents who have complained about the lack of quality internet options in rural areas of Dufferin County and Caledon. It's a problem, he says, is all too common in other parts of the country too.

To that effect, he has been working alongside his colleagues within the Conservative caucus to establish something of an action plan to bolster internet services in areas that are currently underserviced. The key, he feels, is promoting more competition within the internet service provider industry.

"Almost all the government funds are accessed by the large telecoms. And by doing that, you drive out the smaller internet service providers from their ability to compete, and to also provide broadband services in rural communities," Mr. Seeback previously told the Citizen.

Peel Region receives $276.4 million to invest in affordable housing

Written By ALYSSA PARKHILL

Many Residents and all councils from across Peel Region blew a collective sigh of relief last week when the federal government announced it would be provided some much-needed funds to bolster affordable housing reserves across the community.

Last Friday (August 7), Region of Peel received $276.4 million from the federal government to help create more than 2,240 new affordable housing units and shelter beds by 2028.

"Our government is committed to ensuring all Ontarians have access to an affordable place to call home," said Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, Steve Clark in a recent news release. "These important investments in Peel Region are the latest examples of the good things that can happen when we work together to help those most in need in our province."

This investment made history in Peel Region, representing the largest housing funding it has ever received from the Government of Canada.

The $276.4 million will go directly towards the $1 billion commitment the Regional Council endorsed back in 2019 to support the construction of new housing units and sites, which all fall under Peel's Housing Master Plan.

DIFFERENCE MAKER: Caledon Mayor Allan Thompson addresses those in attendance at last Friday's announcement that Peel Region would receive $276.4 million to create more than 2,240 new affordable housing units in the community by 2028.

Many key officials within the Region are confident that the Housing Master Plan will be completely funded. The overall goal is to develop over 5,650 new affordable rental units in the region by 2034, including 31 projects on Peel lands and corporation sites.

Alongside the federal government's investment, a total of $672.8 million has been put into the housing bucket, with $335.3 million in funding from the Region of Peel and $61.1 million through a collection of housing programs.

"On behalf of Peel Regional Council, we are thrilled to partner with the Government of Canada to build much-needed affordable housing in Peel," said Region of Peel Chair Nando Iannicca. "The pandemic is reinforcing how critical affordable housing is to community wellbeing and resiliency. We look forward to continuing to work with both our federal and provincial partners to increase urgently needed housing investments in Peel."

Caledon Mayor Allan Thompson was among many local dignitaries in attendance at the announcement, which took place at Peel Manor Seniors Health and Wellness Village in Brampton.

"These funds, along with Region of Peel's significant commitments, is a huge step forward in helping the Region to address housing needs, including in Caledon," said Mayor Thompson. "I encourage our government partners to continue working with us into the future so we can achieve the goals of our ten-year housing and homelessness plan."

Brampton Mayor Patrick Brown was equally pleased with the announcement, saying the investment would, eventually, make a huge difference across the region.

"This is showing exceptional leadership from our federal government, our provincial government, and understanding this need exists in Peel Region," said Mayor Brown in his announcement.

According to the Homeless Hub, Peel Region found 922 persons experiencing homelessness within the region in 2018.

Regional Council, along with municipal representatives look forward to being able to support and develop affordable housing in the Peel region, which is greatly needed.

"With these funds, the Region will be able to continue building new affordable housing in Brampton, Caledon and Mississauga," said Iannicca. "Only with ongoing partnerships with the federal and provincial governments can we increase the supply of affordable housing to meet the growing needs in Peel."

Written By MARK PAVILONS

As students prepare to get back to school, teachers and parents are a bit apprehensive about what to expect.

Ontario's Education Minister Stephen Lecce said Ontario's plan to reopen schools is the "strongest in Canada." Ontario has the most comprehensive masking policy, and the government has provided more funding for cleaning, testing and staffing.

"We will continue to keep students safe," he said.

Lecce said the Province will continue to step up in significant ways, to respond to the risk as it emerges, and to demonstrate to parents in "action, more than words, we will do whatever it takes."

Lecce said everything they've done is "because we've listened to the science. We have to take a multitude of actions and layers of prevention. We will continue to do that.

"We will continue to be there for our parents and kids."

‘You are not alone’ says Caledon Fire chief amid pandemic

Written By ALYSSA PARKHILL

The Caledon Fire Department is reaching out to the community, spreading support and inclusiveness to anyone struggling with mental health issues during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The coronavirus has had a tremendous impact on individuals, families, businesses, organizations, charities; and, basically, everyone else over the past few months.

According to Statistics Canada, 48 per cent of Canadians reported to have good or even excellent health amid the pandemic, through online surveys. 27 per cent from the ages of 15 to 24, 19 per cent those 25 to 64 and 10 per cent for seniors, 65 and older.

“During times of COVID-19, many of us are starting to feel overwhelmed. Overwhelmed due to financial challenges, job loss, isolation from your friends, family and co-workers. My message to you, is you are not alone,” said Fire Chief for the Town of Caledon Darryl Bailey.

Caledon Fire created an online video to share with the community, spreading their message of support and assistance for anyone struggling with mental health during the difficult times of COVID-19.

“Because of the work we do day in and day out, we know the importance of talking with one another and seeking professional help when you need to,” stated Bailey. “On behalf of Caledon Fire and Emergency Services, we are all in this together.”

Caledon Mayor Allan Thompson lauded the local fire department for stepping up to spread such a positive message at a time when many in the community need it most.

“Thank you to our fire department for sharing this very important message. With these feelings of overwhelm many of us are experiencing, it’s important to know you are not alone,” Mayor Thompson said. “It’s okay to not be okay. Talk about it and reach out if you need help. We are all in this together.”

Following Caledon Fire’s message, the Brampton Fire Department released their own video message to the community of reaching out when in need, and to lean on emergency services for support.

The World Health Organization (WHO) has provided a list of different strategies those struggling with mental health during the pandemic can use to help.

WHO suggests to keep inform on any advice and recommendations given from local, provincial and federal representatives to stay updated.

Create a daily routine including waking up and going to bed at similar times each day, eat healthy and exercise regularly, allocate work time, and time to do things you enjoy.

Keep up with social contact with family, friends, co-workers through social media, text, phone, email, whatever your preference. Take regular breaks from screen time and video games.

“Please don’t hesitate to reach out, and get the help you need,” said Bailey.

On Wednesday, August 5, at approximately 5:12 p.m., officers from Caledon OPP responded to a serious collision in the area of Albion Vaughan Road and Dovaston Gate in Bolton.

The collision involved a cyclist and a dump truck. Initial investigation revealed that the cyclist was travelling eastbound on Dovaston Gate, when the cyclist entered the intersection with Albion Vaughan Road and collided with a dump truck travelling southbound on Albion Vaughan Road.

The cyclist was transported to a local hospital, where he had succumbed to the injuries sustained as a result of the collision. The cyclist has been identified as Pasquale Alonzi, 84, of Caledon.

Members of the OPP Technical Traffic Collision Investigation Unit are assisting with the investigation. Albion Vaughan Road remained closed for several hours for police investigation, and has since re-opened.

Caledon OPP is appealing to the public for additional witnesses of this incident. Anyone with information, dash camera footage, or home security video from the area is asked to contact Caledon OPP detachment at (905) 584-2241 or toll free at 1-888-310-1122.

Local youth assists OPP

On Monday, August 10, at approximately 8:16 p.m. uniformed officers from the Caledon OPP Detachment responded to reports of a disturbance at the Bolton Skate Park. The complainant advised that an unknown intoxicated party was swearing at her and her children at the park. The complainant became concerned for her family's safety and called the police.

As the responding officers began to approach the park, the suspect immediately engaged the officers in a foot pursuit. The suspect ran towards a group of youth nearby and stole one of the bicycles that the suspect used to flee from police. At that point, the officer had made a request to use one of the bicycles belonging to the group to pursue the suspect further.

After a three kilometre bicycle pursuit, the officer apprehended and arrested the suspect.

Samuel Duffy, 30, of Caledon, stands charged with Being intoxicated in a public place, and Theft under $5000.

The accused is scheduled to appear at the Ontario Court of Justice in Orangeville on October 22, 2020, to answer to the charges.

Caledon OPP would like to thank the members of the public for their assistance in this investigation.

Three impaired drivers

On Friday, August 7th at approximately 9:41 p.m., officers from the Caledon OPP Detachment were conducting a stop-sign enforcement in the area of Allan Drive and Ellwood Drive in Bolton, when they observed a black van disobeying a stop sign and failing to stop at the above intersection.

The officers conducted a traffic stop and while speaking to the driver detected an odour of alcohol emanating from the driver's breath. The officer made a demand for the driver to provide a sample of his breath into an approved roadside screening device, which resulted in a "fail" reading. The driver was placed under arrest for Operation while Impaired Blood Alcohol Concentration (BAC) over 80 mgs, and transported to the Caledon OPP Detachment for more breath tests to be conducted.

As a result, Joseph Caravatta, 56, of Caledon, has been charged with: Operation while impaired - BAC over 80 mg, and Disobey stop sign - fail to stop.

The accused is expected to appear at the Ontario Court of Justice in Orangeville on October 21, 2020, to answer to the charges.

On Friday, August 7 at approximately 9:02 p.m., officers responded to a call for service on Donherb Crescent in Bolton. The involved parties were located in a vehicle attempting to leave the scene. A traffic stop was conducted and the occupants were investigated. Upon speaking to the driver, the officer detected an odour of alcohol emanating from the driver's breath. The officer made several demands for the driver to provide a sample of her breath into an approved roadside screening device, however the driver refused..

As a result, the driver, Rebecca Viveiros, 23, of Caledon, stands charged with: Failure or refusal to comply with demand.

The accused is expected to appear at the Ontario Court of Justice in Orangeville on August 27th, 2020 to answer to the charge.

On Sunday, August 9 at about 3:32 p.m. officers responded to a possible impaired driver traffic complaint in the area of Highway 10 and Olde Base Line Road.

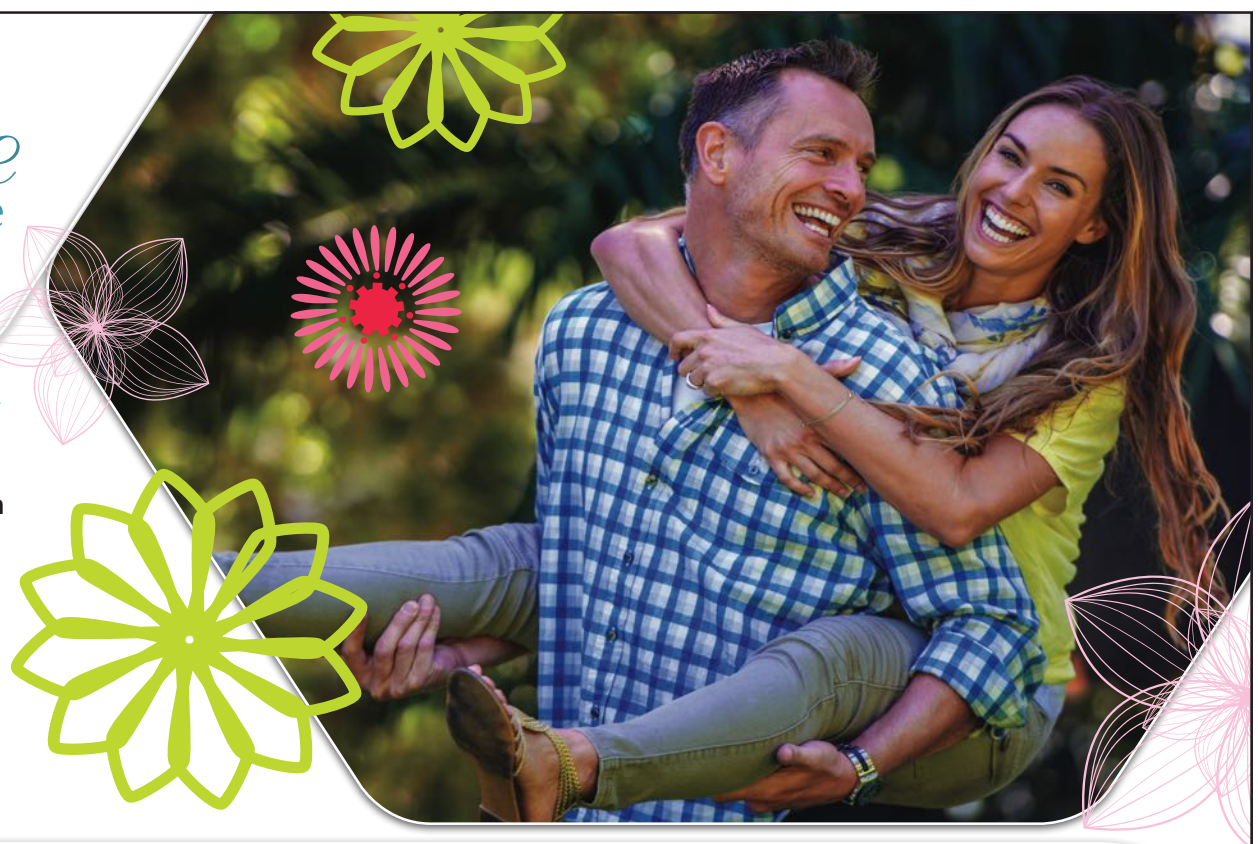

The complainant, an off-duty Peel Regional Police officer advised that a black Sport Utility Vehicle (SUV) was driving erratically, nearly hit him head on, mounted the median at the intersection and drove through a red light.

The off-duty officer followed the vehicle which came to a stop on Olde Base Line Road, where the driver was placed under arrest for Operation while Impaired and Dangerous Driving. The driver was subsequently transported to the Caledon OPP Detachment for breath tests to be conducted

Local eatery Mamma's Shack the latest casualty of coronavirus

Written By ALYSSA PARKHILL

Businesses whether local, provincial or international, have been severely impacted because of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Many have been forced to close their doors to flatten the curve and stop the spread, for months. Many, unfortunately, haven't reopened.

All non-essential businesses in Ontario were instructed to close on March 23, to further contain the spread of COVID-19. Many business owners willingly understand, knowing the severe measures. But all weren't aware of how long they were to be closed.

One local restaurant in Caledon Village closed their doors permanently a couple of weeks ago because of the severe impacts to their business.

Mamma's Shack, previously located on Charleston Road, announced on July 28, that they were unable to remain open due to the hardships brought upon the business because of COVID-19.

"We are very sorry to share the news that we have had to close our doors permanently. We would like to thank each and every one of you that have supported us over the last 2 years," read the Facebook post. "This journey and experience is one we will never forget."

The community shared their thoughts and reminiscing comments, remembering all their good times they had at the popular restaurant, commenting about how sad they are to see Mamma's Shack go.

"Unfortunately, with the current struggles in the world we just couldn't hang on any longer. We wish you all good health and again," said the post.

Many other businesses have reported to be struggling because of the pandemic, and more permanent closures across the GTA are likely.

Some of these include restaurants, bars, bakery, and even some grocery stores.

Included are Crocodile Rock Bar in Toronto, popular and long-standing pizza restaurant, Vesuvio Pizza closed down due to COVID-19 hardships, and Il Gatto Nero shut down after 61 years in business.

Orangeville Mediterranean restaurant Eat Like Sabby, closed down due to the impacts the pandemic back in May.

On top of the smaller local businesses, bigger companies have even had to resort to closing some stores for relief in their financial situations.

Some of these include Victoria's Secret, Old Navy, Aldo, Starbucks, Bed Bath and Beyond to only name a few.

The province of Ontario has committed more than $900 million to support small businesses across the province, which was recently extended on July 31.

"Our government has promised to be there to support people and jobs since the pandemic first hit our province," said Rod Phillips, Minister of Finance in the news release. "By extending support for commercial rent at the same time most of the province is in stage three, the province of Ontario is helping more businesses get through this challenging period, so they have an opportunity to recover and welcome back their customers."

The Town of Caledon have stepped up to help small businesses in Caledon, as they understand the challenges that the businesses are facing.

The Economic Development staff continue to support businesses with any advice or questions through phone, email and online sources. They created online programs such as their 'Shop Local' to help promotion of the businesses, as well as an online map showcasing who is still open.

Property taxes payments were also deferred to help those dealing with financial hardships.

"The pandemic has had a huge impact on the local economy," said Mayor Allan Thompson. "But I've been amazed at how this community has dug deep to support our local businesses. And in the face of enormous challenges local business owners and entrepreneurs have shown real grit and creativity to keep serving their customers. With fewer cases of COVID-19 I'm optimistic that the recovery is going to pick up steam and we'll get back to "the new normal" soon!"

Local artists back in action as Alton Mill Arts Centre reopens

Written By ALYSSA PARKHILL

Now that Peel Region has entered Stage 3, many local facilities are now allowed to open the doors to the public.

Alton Mills Arts Centre, after months of being closed, finally reopened the centre to new vendors and the community earlier in August.

Gallery Gemma jewellery founder and owner Annie-Marie Warburton has been with Alton Mill for the past 13 years. The impact of being closed for months was big for her.

"I was actually in tears," she said. "Tears of joy that I'm going to get to reopen and do what I love and serve our community. To be closed for over three months... It made me realize how much it all means to me, and gave me some time to reflect."

Gallery Gemma creates one-of-a-kind pieces of jewellery in the studio at Alton Mills Art Centre, where customers can ask for custom-made or shop among the beautiful selection already created. There's plenaty of options, according to Warburton, from engagement rings and wedding rings, to necklaces and bracelets.

The biggest challenge throughout her months of practical isolation was not engaging with her regular customer base, who typically come into the studio, to look, browse and shop in person.

"My business is a combination of people coming into the gallery and choosing something unique, and they couldn't do that and because we don't yet have an online store, I was stuck." said Warburton. "Also, meeting with people to do custom work when we're closed, were my challenges."

She added, "We overcame them because people who had birthdays or anniversaries, we have their records in our files, and we'd contact them and suggest things as well as started doing custom designs on Zoom."

There was specific preparation when it came time to reopen, including cleaning every single piece of jewellery that is on location.

"We just wanted to be sure that every single piece was immaculate," said Warburton. "We have a protocol that if somebody wants to try something on, we clean the piece before they try it and clean it after. The people that have come through to enjoy the Alton Mill and have been shopping, has been fantastic that they're supporting their local community."

REOPEN FOR BUSINESS: Alton Mill Arts Centre has finally opened their doors with the same hours of operation where vendors and artists such as Gallery Gemma can get back to business.

It's been challenging for Gallery Gemma and other vendors to transition to the online world to keep their business afloat, when a key factor to customers selecting what they want, is seeing it for themselves.

"It's important that emotion, passion, the whole reason that somebody might need designing a custom piece, or redesigning family jewellery, it's really about them," she explained. "Making sure that you get that connection."

"I've loved watching the Alton Mills evolve and grow and something that's really a national treasure. I'm so honoured to be a part of it and to be successful and be a part of it," said Warburton.

Will we all be gone without a trace?

by Mark Pavilons

Nothing, not a trace.

It was if we were never here.

Other than trinkets, baubles, clothes and a mess in the bathroom, when we vanish from the face of the earth very little of ourselves remains. Hollow, material things, made by strangers, adorn our walls and shelves.

Not very reassuring, not one bit.

I am still struggling with the mortality of it all, and the finite existence we all have. Two people I knew passed away recently. One was only 39 and the other in his 80s. Loss sucks.

I thought about the whole circle of life but fell deep into despair, into a dark, bleak spot in my head. It's like taking a huge, human family portrait and just cutting people out, one by one, as they pass. No more smiling faces, no more untucked shirts or crooked ties. No more anything.

And that makes me sad beyond description.

What will I do when I have to face the final curtain, when my time is up? I don't want to go. I never want to disappear into nothingness, let go and depart without a trace. That's horrible.

Go, go where, exactly?

If I knew, I may be somewhat comforted at the prospect. I like to be prepared, all packed, with my toothbrush, pills, a change of clothes and my wallet, just in case.

If I am taken, with or without my consent, will I have to leave with the clothes on my back? Now, I have quite the collection of colourful Hawaiian shirts and any one of them would suit me fine. In the blinding whiteness of the great beyond, I'd be sure to stand out. Sure, at that point there is no one to impress, but I don't want to be lost, without direction and without purpose. I don't want to be all alone.

Blend in, blend in with who, where, for what reason?

I have never been one to melt away into the glob of human goo.

Will Heaven be different?

It won't matter what I'm wearing if the next plateau – the next and perhaps final destination – is but a black, empty void, a blanket of thick nothingness that wraps around my very soul and sucks every bit of essence from me.

Then where would I be?

I just left my home world, a place I had finally gotten used to after so many decades of challenges, hurdles, tears, joys and pain. And to leave it all behind, for what, an endless nightmare, a dream where I can't scream, can't move, can't get away?

Not my cup of tea, as the Brits say.

I like being a human being, with all of my faults, frailties, shortcomings, indiscretions, bad habits and bad moods. I like chicken wings, cold pizza and Crown Royal. I like the smell of campfires, the sound of waves reaching the shore. I like the feel of sunshine on my crumpled, scarred face. I like petting my dogs and hearing my kids laugh. I love seeing my wife smile.

Will these things abound in the afterlife, like moving Harry Potter-like pictures on the wall of some immense castle in the sky?

Not bloody likely.

I don't want to share the Bates Motel of the next life with millions of strangers, all wandering around in their hospital gowns.

I don't want to be anywhere that I can't feel, touch, smell, see or taste. I want to exist, and continue to thrive, in some form or another.

I'd even be happy with being a spirit, a ghostly shadow of my former self, floating around the world. Oh, the places we'll go:

"There are some, down the road between hither and yon, that can scare you so much you won't want to go on," according to Dr. Seuss.

When I watch apocalyptic movies about zombies and vampires, most of humans would rather die than live as monsters. Not me! Hell, if the only option is to roam about mindlessly in search of flesh, I'll take it. And I can keep on wearing my floral shirts for all eternity!

Death, in my opinion, is overrated. It is not the ideal end to a life here on earth, a journey in the flesh. It's not a fitting end to anyone's story.

Even Frankenstein's monster wanted to live.

As we move forward and our species continues to evolve and progress, I wish science would create a way to save and preserve our essence, our soul if you will. If we can be "downloaded" or "copied" or even "posted" on the internet, we would have a morsel of everlasting life.

If my family doesn't want to keep me around in a holographic alarm clock so be it. Send me to another port or USB and bid me a bon voyage! Or, shoot my tattered remains, in cryogenic stasis, into deep space, to one day be revived by an advanced species who are just dying to be regaled by my stories of wit and humour!

I enjoy learning about Ancient Greek, Roman and Mayan civilizations. I have a fondness for antiquities and have a small collection of artifacts. Am I keeping the flame of gladiators and medicine men alive, and honouring their memory in some small way? Perhaps.

But will future generations uncover and proudly display a button from one of my aforementioned shirts? Will someone, in transcribing earth's internet history, come across one of my columns and be inspired?

Again, not bloodly likely.

We have a set of wind chimes in our back yard. They make the most beautiful sound in the summer. They clang together whenever there is a breeze. They're not aware of their actions because they're not alive. But they will continue to chime as long as there's wind. They have the potential to last forever.

I know, too, that one day our sun will die, and our planet will be reduced to a frozen wasteland, void of life.

None of us will be around of course, and neither will our great, great, great grandchildren. But it's still not fair. It's not how a race should meet its maker.

So, if anyone has any comforting words about mortality, lay them on me! Time for a great big group hug and sigh, as we are all merely players on an immense stage. We don't know when our show will close, we but it must.

Yet another disappointment

MIKE BAKER
THE MIC CHECK

The more things change, the more they stay the same.

A horrible cliché, I know. But it's one that, in this uber-strange COVID-19 world, where practically everything we know and love has been flipped upside down, seems to perfectly sum up our beleaguered Toronto Maple Leafs.

Despite being heralded by Las Vegas bookmakers last summer as one of the favourites to lift this year's Stanley Cup, the Leafs stumbled before they even reached the first hurdle this time around – losing out to the Columbus Blue Jackets in five games in the NHL's playoff play-in qualifier. The feelings across Leafs Nation following Sunday's meagre elimination, after a 3-0 defeat on home ice, were familiar.

Disappointment. Frustration. Heartbreak. Again. There's no question that something needs to change this off-season, but how far does Leafs management go? This is a cap-strapped team, and, while they possess one of the most talented attacking quartets in the entire league, there are glaring deficiencies across their line-up. Deficiencies that were all too easily exposed by a disciplined, hard-working Blue Jackets team last week.

The Leafs have long had problems on the blueline. Kyle Dubas' big-ticket move last year to trade Nazem Kadri for an average Alex Kerfoot and, essentially, a year of Tyson Barrie simply did not work. Barrie did not bring the elite offensive game he was known for in Colorado to Toronto, putting up a hugely disappointing 5 goals and 34 assists across 70 games – his worst return since his debut season as a rookie in 2012/13.

Now with Barrie all but gone, with his contract set to expire, the only reminder of that trade is a forward who was brought in to play centre, but, thus far, has played his best games for the Leafs on the wing. It wasn't an awful season for Kerfoot, but looking at his statistics – 28 points in 68 games, it's a considerable regression from the 43 and 42 point seasons he had with the Avalanche over the previous two seasons. Maybe we'll be kind and chalk this year up to him needing to get used to his new surroundings.

Elsewhere in the lineup, the likes of Kasperi Kapanen, Andreas Johnsson and Ilya Mikheyev had reasonable seasons. None of them particularly tore up any trees with their play and, with the Leafs needing to make some moves this summer, they should all be considered expendable. I'm going to go out on a limb and say goaltender Freddie Andersen could also face the chopping block. There have been question marks over his ability to carry the Leafs to a win when it matters most for a couple of years now. In his four seasons in Toronto, the team has never failed to make the playoffs, but has also never managed to win a playoff series. Some responsibility for that has to fall on their goaltender, who was particularly disappointing in Game 5 of the Columbus series on Sunday.

You may notice a few names I have not brought forth for debate. The Big Four as they are known – Auston Matthews, John Tavares, Mitch Marner and William Nylander account for almost half of the Leafs' salary cap. Never in the salary cap era has a team invested so lop-sidedly in its offence. The three highest earners – Matthews, Tavares and Marner – are amongst the ten best paid players in the league.

There is a belief throughout Leafs Nation that Toronto would be best served trading one of their four stars for help on the blueline. Unless Dubas is about to do a complete 180 on his vision for what this Leafs team is and can be, tI wouldn't bank on that happening. And, honestly, that's a good thing for Leafs fans, regardless of how you may feel today.

It wasn't that long ago that the Edmonton Oilers found themselves in a position where, they felt, they had an abundance of offensive talent and would be willing to sacrifice one of their star forwards to shore up their defense. That June 29, 2016 trade, where the Oilers sent Taylor Hall to New Jersey in a straight swap for solid, but certainly not spectacular d-man Adam Larsson has to go down as one of the worst trades of all time.

Now, I'm not suggesting Dubas would be boneheaded enough to make a trade like that. I'm simply pointing out that by dangling, say, Mitch Marner, the Leafs may not get as good a return as you may think. For one, that eye-watering five-year $10.9 million contract is enough to make at least half of the NHL to back out before negotiations can begin. Marner is an elite talent, but he's also a winger. It's a widely accepted fact that, in order of importance to a team, a top winger falls way below an all-star goaltender, stud blueliner, or first-line centre.

To trade Marner, the Leafs would be looking for a stellar, right-handed defenseman back, who could partner Morgan Reilly on the Leafs' top defensive line. Now, ask yourself, how often do you see top defenders traded in the NHL? There was the Erik Karlsson deal, brought on because Ottawa ownership didn't want to pay him the $11.5 million a year he's now getting in San Jose. Going back a few years, there's the Seth Jones deal, when he was traded to the Blue Jackets as a highly-touted, but largely untested youngster from a stacked defensive lineup in Nashville. Who went the other way in that deal? Centre Ryan Johansen, who, at the time, was coming off a couple of hugely successful years playing the number one centre role, and who the Predators believed they could build their offense around.

Unfortunately, I don't see the Leafs getting anywhere near the kind of package that would warrant getting rid of someone as talented as Marner. Instead, they're going to have to look at some of their secondary contracts – like the Andersens, Kapanens, and Johnssons to make a move. With Cody Ceci also set to leave, CapFriendly is projecting the Leafs will have around $4.5 million in cap space this off season, with some RFAs still to sign.

If it were up to me, I'd explore any and all options to move Andersen, who is set to enter the final year of his contract with the Leafs. Maybe a package of Freddie with a Kapanen gets the Leafs a solid, dependable defenseman to improve their blueline. Potential names? The Devils' Damon Severson has been touted, so too has Minnesota's Jonas Brodin. Either of those guys would be a huge upgrade on Ceci, and could help to stabilize the blueline alongside Reilly and Jake Muzzin.

It's going to be a tricky summer for Dubas, but for those banking on a considerable, Big Four-like blow-up… I wouldn't count on it.

Lebanon meltdown

GWYNNE DYER
OUR WORLD TODAY

Beirut has been living with car bombs and air raids on a sporadic but continuing basis for so long that it would probably make sense to rebuild this time with shatterproof glass. The torrent of broken glass falling from a thousand shattered buildings probably accounted for half the 158 dead found so far in Beirut, and certainly for most of the 6,000 wounded.

The Beirutis were not expecting a giant exploding warehouse, of course, but Lebanon has been cursed in so many other ways that in retrospect it seems almost inevitable. Fifteen years of brutal civil war, followed by thirty years of corrupt rule by the very warlords who ruined the country, ended Beirut's claim to be the 'Paris of the Middle East' a long time ago.

The sense that the country's time was running out has taken different forms over the years, but it was always there. I even thought the end might be coming with Islamic State a few years ago, and took my wife there to see the old Lebanon (some of which still survived and was easy to love) before IS came over the mountains from Syria to destroy it all.

Another blow to my reputation as a prophet, and one I was happy to take. IS over-reached itself, and is gone. What finally did it for Lebanon was more banal: the deliberate looting of the country's entire fragile economy, and the concealment of the proceeds in obscure foreign banks, by the few thousand people whom ordinary Lebanese contemptuously call the 'political class'.

'Warlords' is the right name for them, although many are sectarian leaders whose pedigrees go back to Ottoman times. It is a country where old men and obsolete communal loyalties oppress the impoverished young. That is true of almost every country in the Arab world, of course, but in Lebanon's case the only remaining route to a better future may lie through even greater violence.

Popular anger was great even before the 2.75-kiloton explosion last week. Garbage collection failed years ago, the only safe water comes in bottles, and there is still not reliable 24-hour electricity 30 years after the war. The currency has collapsed, most people's savings have been wiped out, the country has defaulted on its debt, and there are no jobs for the young.

There were huge non-violent street demonstrations last October, and the multi-party coalition government was forced to resign. "All of them means all of them," the demonstrators chanted – but all that really changed was the faces of the cabinet ministers. Meet the new boss, same as the old boss.

There is a lot of sympathy for the Lebanese, and foreign governments are willing to bail the country out of its troubles – but only on condition that the loans don't just get pocketed by the same thieves in silk ties, and that there is complete transparency in banking and in government financial transactions.

Those conditions were too tough for the 'political class', since many of their past crimes would be exposed and future ones would become more difficult. So, incredibly, the Lebanese government refused the loans even as families went without food. Then came the explosion, which was clearly the result of official incompetence at the very least.

The demonstrators came out on the streets in force on Saturday, and by Sunday the army was there as well, firing live rounds into the air. The militias are out too, but so far they have left their weapons at home. The likelihood that this confrontation will be resolved peacefully? Worse than evens, certainly.

The crisis might have been delayed another year without the explosion, but not more. Even Hezbollah, once violent but relatively honest, now also has its hand in the till, and popular outrage is huge. This time, the protesters are building mock gallows in the street.

The oligarchs have their backs to the wall, but they know that popular rage can often be drowned in blood in the Arab world. In the past decade it has been done successfully in Syria, in Egypt, and in Bahrain, so why not in Lebanon too?

Here's why not. Even if they win in the streets, the oligarchs still lose, because there is no economy left to plunder. And if they lose in the streets, they could easily end up on real gallows.

Rolling the dice with kids' lives

SHERALYN ROMAN
TALK CALEDON

When you read a headline like this, cold and stark, it grabs your attention. Perhaps you're thinking "Now what is she talking about?" or "That's pretty inflammatory." But is it? Maybe we need to think of the current back to school plan in such frank terms in order to get the message across that in fact, to some degree, rolling the dice with our children's lives at stake is exactly what we are doing right now. With Sick Kids making a clear statement to the public that their original recommendations are not being followed and that they are now – too little too late – conducting a study in the coming days on how the virus might spread in the classroom, I think we are right to question just how sound the Ontario government's return to school plan really is. Are we rolling the dice? What kind of odds would a Vegas casino give us on what percentage of children might catch COVID-19, or at the very least, bring it back home to their families?

We have already seen examples in the US of schools that reopened with crowded hallways, limited mask use and zero social distancing. In one Georgia high school it took only a matter of days for nine cases of COVID to be reported and the school to be shut down for 14 days of quarantine. Who knows what the exponential spread of those 9 cases will be? I do realize of course that the US is in a free-fall when it comes to the virus and that, unlike there, mask wearing will be mandatory here at home – but let's not forget, that's only for children Grade four and up. While there is some evidence children may not get the virus at the same rate as adults, there are mounting concerns they can transmit it. I believe we are betting against the house, risking it all on a roll of the dice.

We must also not forget that while COVID-19 is bad enough, there are other risks to children, including the rare but known occurrence of Multi-System Inflammatory Syndrome, a condition similar to Kawasaki Disease that appears to be caused by COVID-19. It can lead to enlargement of blood vessels, possible organ failure and potential heart problems. Again, it's rare and most health experts caution against raising alarm bells but how much of a gambler are you? With large numbers of a particularly vulnerable age group (young children) returning to school without the requirement to wear a mask, will we start to see an increase in MIS-C?

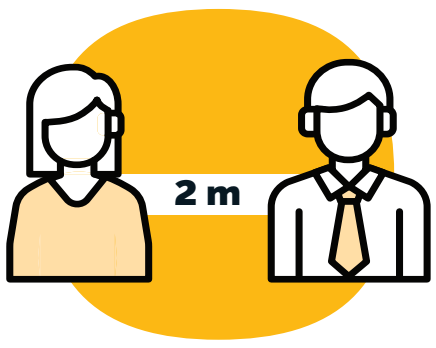

There are so many variables at play. In keeping with the gambling analogy, I have to wonder how, with all of the unknowns, anyone can make an informed decision, based on the odds, about how to proceed. We haven't even spoken about riding the bus to and from school yet. Surveys have gone out to parents asking them to commit to whether their child(ren) will attend school, engage in online learning or be removed from the school system altogether and home-schooled instead. If parents choose not to send their kids to school, they are agreeing to do so until February at a minimum. A lot can happen (as we have clearly already experienced!) in six months and making such a decision now is committing a family to a course of action that may not fit their needs in 3 months time. It's also asking the school board to commit teaching and online resources and staffing both accordingly. By the same token, agreeing to send your child to school is also contracting with the school board to hire an appropriate number of teachers, plan for class sizes the best they can, based on the "known" number of students who plan on returning and then what? One case of COVID causes panic, parents pull children out of school, suddenly class sizes are significantly smaller and now schools are overstaffed? Do we lay off teachers? Do we combine classrooms and/or grades because after all, in elementary school there is no cap on class size as there is in high school? What happens if a combined class contains both grade 3 and 4 students; does half the class wear a mask while the other half doesn't? What happens if it's a Teacher who tests positive? Is the entire class in quarantine? If the child from that class has an older sibling – is that class now also in quarantine? So many questions. Roll the dice and let the chips fall where they may.

This is too important an issue to gamble on. We need to hear more from our government on how they plan to assist school boards with class sizes, protecting staff, protecting students and what will happen if there is a mass exodus of kids after just a few weeks of school. We've heard from many parents (both those who have the flexibility and those who don't but are equally as worried) that they'll send the kids to school but monitor the situation and pull them out at the first hint of danger. Of the parents who choose online learning and this virus by some miracle goes away, what then? Too bad kiddos – you're stuck at home until February. Might it have been better to wait just a bit longer? Universities and Colleges, in large part, have cancelled in person classes for the entire first semester.

This means it will be January at the earliest before those students return to school in-person. Might it not have been better to do the same at the elementary and high school level – knowing that yes there would be hardships but families could have spent the summer planning for them accordingly. Instead I fear a "Stop/Start" scenario where, because of the fluid nature of the virus and the number of unanswered questions like those posed here, school will start, school will stop, some families will send kids to school and others will stop sending their kids and the stability that we are all seeking will simply not exist. These are odds that most gamblers would shy away from I'm sure. We're rolling the dice but it's our children's lives that are at stake.

A YEAR TO FORGET: The COVID-19 pandemic has put a halt in wedding plans as gathering restrictions remain in place, allowing only smaller and more intimate gatherings.

Wedding industry ravaged by coronavirus, will recover in 2021

Written By ALYSSA PARKHILL

Brides and grooms all over the world, were left shocked, disappointed and stressed when the COVID-19 pandemic infected our world and put their weddings on hold.

Restrictions were put into place back in March limiting gatherings of people, indoors and out.

With the pandemic beginning at the end of winter, beginning of spring, the wedding industry was hit tremendously.

"As a wedding planner, summer is the busiest time of year for us. Our season usually kicks off in late April-early May and is typically very busy until Thanksgiving long weekend in October. Unfortunately, the pandemic has completely changed the wedding season this year, as many couples have postponed or cancelled their wedding," said Founder and Principle Planner of Dash Events and Co. Sonia Kohli-Tamber.

Dash Events and Co. serves the Peel and Toronto regions from full or partial wedding planning, destination weddings, consultations and customization. With the doom of cancellations and postponements, Kohli-Tamber says the wedding industry has been hit hard.

"This has caused a very big financial strain for all businesses in the wedding industry as our livelihood is dependent on weddings taking place," she said.

On June 13, the provincial government announced the easing of restrictions on group gatherings for special occasions including weddings and funerals. Later, when Peel region entered Phase 3 of reopening of the province, group gatherings were extended to a maximum of 50 people indoors, and 100 people outdoors.

Kohli-Tamber explains that with the specific, and strict guidelines given by the government, it was challenging to be able to organize and plan safe events, but also lean towards what the soon-to-be-married couple wanted.

"Planning micro or intimate weddings while keeping up with changing government guidelines. These are unprecedented times and unfortunately, none of us have the answers we wish we did. As we navigate through the pandemic, it's been difficult to plan a wedding with a certain set of rules and then those rules change a few weeks later," she said.

With the uncertainty of what was to happen, and the fear surrounding the virus, almost all of the couples working with Dash Events and Co. cancelled and postponed their events back in March.

"In a matter of weeks, 90 percent of our weddings from April-September 2020 were all postponed. From an emotional perspective, it is an overwhelming experience having to postpone your wedding and many couples were feeling anxious and saddened by the whole situation," she explained. "No one saw this coming."

At the beginning, the panic was high, and the stress was higher. But as soon as Dash Events and Co. were able to gather their spirits, they did all they could to help their couples postpone and even cancel.

Now, weddings are beginning to start back up, but more cautious than ever.

"Currently, all of our meetings have been hosted virtually and should we need to meet with clients in person, we adhere to the social distancing guidelines. During events, our team members all have personalized masks, clipboards and pens that are not shared with others. We also have included extra protective and sanitary items into our emergency kits for our couples," said Kohli-Tamber.

But one question comes to mind. What will next year look like?

With weddings being cancelled or postponed, 2021 is looking busier than ever for the wedding industry.

"The pandemic is affecting business for 2021 as well. Inquiries have declined for two reasons; the uncertainty for what the government guidelines will be for 2021 and the influx of weddings from 2020 being postponed to 2021, said Kohli-Tamber.

"If all goes well, 2021 will be extremely busy with postponed weddings from 2020 and newly engaged couples planning their weddings," she said.

We may even see more virtual weddings, or smaller and intimate celebrations as opposed to the large and eccentric events.

"We encourage all of our couples to follow the safety guidelines in preventing the spread of the virus," said Kohli-Tamber. "I also foresee that live-streaming will be very popular for the next two years to invite guests digitally."

Peter MacKay makes campaign stop in Caledon, discusses new jobs plan

He added, "We have to redesign those programs really for the benefit of smaller and regional internet service providers, because they're the ones that are actually trying to expand their services across rural municipalities."

Locally, Wightman Communications has been working to bridge the infrastructure gap in parts of Dufferin County, announcing back in June it planned to invest $56 million to bring "next-generation" internet services to Orangeville. The company specializes in providing fibre optic internet to small communities such as Arthur, Fergus, Listowel and Hanover. It's this type of investment that Mr. Seeback feels the federal government should be encouraging, and assisting with, across the country.

It has now been five years since Mr. MacKay stepped away from the federal political arena, choosing not to seek re-election in 2015 after previously serving six terms as a Member of Parliament, starting back in 1997. He spoke openly about his concern over the direction the country is headed, particularly the economy, and felt he could no longer sit back and watch when he feels he can make a real difference, and help to get Canada back on track.

"Some issues are very important to me, and a big part of why (I'm running for leadership). I'm talking justice, and national security issues that deal very much with Canada's place in the world," Mr. MacKay said. "We have the lowest number of deployed troops right now that we've had in decades. We're really pulled away from some of the traditional relations, and traditional positions we have previously taken on the global stage."

He added, "I have concerns for the country my children are going to inherit, and everyone's children are going to inherit, with massive debts. I have concerns for issues that go to the very core of our country's future. For prosperity, and for opportunities that should be there in a country as great as ours.

"Crucially though, I fear we have too much corruption and mismanagement now at the very centre, and in the highest office of our government," Mr. MacKay continued.

As one of the founding fathers of the Conservative Party as it stands today – Mr. MacKay was a key component of the merger between the old Progressive Conservative Party and Canadian Heritage Party in 2003 – Peter feels he has a responsibility to step up at a time when the Tories are in disarray, after current leader Andrew Scheer expressed his desire to step down in Dec. 2019. He committed to staying on until the Party was able to select a new leader, with Conservative members having the option to vote for their preferred option up until Aug. 21.

Joining Mr. MacKay on the ballot is Durham MP Erin O'Toole, Hastings-Lennox and Addington MP Derek Sloan and Toronto-based lawyer Leslyn Lewis.

Having served for nine years as the Deputy Leader of the Conservative Party, working closely alongside former Prime Minister Stephen Harper, from 2004 to 2015, Mr. MacKay feels he's the right candidate to unite the party ahead of the next federal election, slated to take place on, or before, Oct. 16, 2023.

"The key word is unite. We have to stay tight as a party. We know what happens when we fracture. We lived through that period in the 90s, when our party really fractured," Mr. MacKay said. "Uniting the Conservative Party, for me, is essential not just for our party's interest, or partisan interest, but essential in terms of offering Canadians an alternative in the next election. That goes to the essence of unity in Canada, and address the feelings and sentiments in many regions right now who feel like Ottawa has forgotten them.

He continued, "We need to remember the lessons of the past, and ensure we keep our Conservative values front and centre. That's very important as we try to get to a place where we can present ourselves as a government in waiting."

The most important way to make that presentation, Mr. MacKay feels, is by talking about his platform – essentially, a roadmap to recovery following the incredible expense of the still ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. The key cog is what he calls the "eight-point jobs plan for Canada".

"After human health, people's attention has turned very quickly now to economic health. Capitalizing on our natural resources, most notably our agriculture and energy sector. Getting those products into the global market will help to stimulate our economy quickly, and we can do it," Mr. MacKay said. "With the proper infrastructure, and certain changes or reversals of positions our current government has taken, Canada can capitalize on many opportunities in the global market for food and for energy."

He spoke of the need to stimulate the nation's manufacturing sector, believing there is a "huge appetite" amongst Canadians to buy locally-sourced and locally-made Canadian goods. This in turn would provide the small business community the shot in the arm it needs to recover after a rocky year to date.

"We need to create a pro-business environment, and that means boosting consumer confidence and business confidence," Mr. MacKay said. He vowed to bring about changes to key legislation that he says will allow certain businesses in Canada to thrive in the years ahead.

More than anything, however, Mr. MacKay is adamant about the fact that he wants to see the Conservative Party become more modern and inclusive so as to encourage more people than ever before to support their progressive platform in the next election. With that in mind, he has worked with his campaign team to establish a "comprehensive plan" for the environment, that he says will help lower emissions, not only here in Canada, but across the globe.

He wants to increase investment in liquefied Canadian natural gas, and export it to other countries to serve as a replacement source of energy for the almost 2,500 coal-fired power plants across the globe, which are producing massive amounts of carbon dioxide. He also wants to further invest in carbon sequestration – the process of, essentially, removing Carbon Dioxide from the atmosphere and, normally, burying and storing it underground.

"Young people and Canadians everywhere are concerned about climate change, and it is real, so we have to have a plan that addresses it," MacKay said of his plan for the environment. "We have a very comprehensive plan that can work that brings the environment front and centre, but also helps us become major energy exporters to move us towards a greener economy."

Briefly discussing the man behind the name and extensive platform, Mr. MacKay described himself as pro-choice, and a supporter of equal marriage. Should he be successful in his bid to lead the Conservative Party, Peter says he would fight to bring back the Office of Religious Freedom, nixed by the Liberals in 2016.

"In my heart, I believe in fundamental rights for Canadians. We have to continue to be the party that promotes human rights," Mr. MacKay said. "John Diefenbaker produced the first Bill of Rights in this country, we don't take a backseat to anyone when it comes to the protection of human rights."

And as for the one quality that sets him apart from the rest of the leadership hopefuls?

"I think experience. And compassion. We need a steady hand right now at the helm. With the greatest respect, we need someone who is a serious leader. Someone that will get results. Results to me mean getting our economy moving, and getting people back to work," Mr. MacKay concluded.

The Study

The Region has completed a Schedule 'B' Municipal Class Environmental Assessment (EA) for improvements at the intersection of Albion Vaughan Road and King Street. The limits of the study area are 300m back for each leg of the intersection, as illustrated in the figure below. The intersection is located on the boundary between The Town of Caledon, Township of King, York Region and the Region of Peel.

The study was conducted in compliance with Schedule 'B' of the Municipal Class EA, as outlined in the Municipal Engineers Association Municipal Class Environmental Assessment (October 2000, as amended in 2007, 2011 and 2015 which is approved under the Ontario Environmental Assessment Act. Through consultation with agencies and the public, the preferred design for Albion Vaughan Road and King Street Intersection generally includes the following elements:

- Addition of a northbound right turn lane;
- Converting existing southbound exclusive right turn lane to southbound through-right lane;
- Addition of a westbound right turn lane;
- No modification to the existing eastbound intersection configuration (exclusive left turn, through lane, right-turn lane) and
- Opportunities for integration of sidewalks in all segments of the intersection as well as cycling facilities to tie into eventual active transportation facilities along the King Street corridor.

Ontario provides support for families of children on the autism spectrum

Written By MIKE BAKER

Ontario is providing families in the Ontario Autism Program (OAP) with services to support their child's ongoing learning and development. Foundational family services such as family and peer mentoring, caregiver workshops and coaching will be tailored to the unique regional and cultural needs in different communities.

These services will build on existing virtual and remote options introduced during the COVID-19 outbreak. The first phase of foundational family services is part of the ongoing implementation of the new needs-based, sustainable and family-centred OAP.

"Feedback received through public consultations and the OAP Advisory Panel highlighted the importance of having ongoing capacity-building supports available to families," said Todd Smith, Minister of Children, Community and Social Services. "That's why family supports that put children at the centre of care are a key element of our new needs-based Ontario Autism Program. We know having virtual services as an option during this challenging time has become critical to families and service providers."

The first phase of foundational family services launched Aug. 7. Services will be offered at no cost in a variety of formats with individual and group supports and virtual and in-person sessions. Options may vary during the first phase of implementation as providers continue to expand their services and as COVID-19 restrictions are lifted. For example, families may participate in an online group workshop to learn strategies to help toilet train their child and then receive one-on-one clinical follow-up afterward, or they may access coaching sessions to help with managing challenging behaviours. The services are based on a family's changing needs over time and their child's needs, strengths and developmental stage.

"In these unprecedented times, the needs of children and youth on the autism spectrum and their families are greater than ever," said Marg Spoelstra, co-chair, OAP Advisory Panel. "It is encouraging to see the new foundational family services being implemented province-wide as recommended by the panel and now through the sustained efforts of the OAP Implementation Working Group."

Families can contact select Ontario Autism Program service providers to learn more about the types of supports currently available in their community.

"Ontario's publicly supported providers are ready to increase their offerings for this essential component of the new OAP," said Jennifer Churchill, CEO of Empowered Kids Ontario - Enfants Avenir Ontario. "Building on the system that is in place aligns with the recommendations of the OAP Advisory Panel. The government is responding and that's good news."

Since announcing the new needs-based Ontario Autism Program in December 2019, the ministry has:

- Launched a variety of interim early years supports focused on younger children on the wait list to help build skills in social communication, engagement, speech and language and emotional regulation.
- Made it easier for families to receive funding by streamlining and reducing administrative steps.
- Begun development of a new user-friendly family website, the future one-stop-shop to register for the OAP, apply for funding and get updates on status in the program.

"We are working extremely hard to implement an Ontario Autism Program built by the community, for the community that supports the needs of families and their children," said Minister Smith. "This significant transformation will lead us to a sustainable, needs-based program that will provide all families access to supports and services no matter where they live in Ontario."

Foundational family services are one of many service pathways that families will have access to in the new Ontario Autism Program.

These pathways include accessing: Core services like Applied Behaviour Analysis, speech language pathology, occupational therapy and mental health services; Early intervention and school readiness services to help young children access critical services when they will benefit most, and to prepare them to enter school; and Urgent and complex needs services to support children and youth who are in service, or are waiting for service, and have significant and immediate needs.

In July 2019, the Ontario Autism Program budget was increased from approximately $300 million to $600 million annually to help ensure it is both needs-based and sustainable moving forward.

Written By ROBERT BELARDI

GYM STILL CLOSED: Bolton Gymnastics is currently in limbo, awaiting further instructions from Gymnastics Ontario regarding when the local facility may be able to reopen.

Dave Sandford planned to take his wife to Switzerland for their 35th wedding anniversary in October. His wife, has never been to a part of the world, shrouded with swiss alps and clear blue water ever before.

It would have been the cute, celebratory anecdote all couples search for in their thinking caps. But of course, the current COVID-19 pandemic ravaged through those plans, coercing the couple to tear apart the idea.

Aside from facing his travel restrictions, the CEO of Gymnastics Ontario has a lot on his plate.

"Five clubs out of our 200 club-membership have shut the doors already," Sandford said.

The former paramedic for the Canadian Armed Forces is shapeshifting gymnastics to adhere to all of the latest distancing and cleanliness protocols.

Sandford's document written in July, is enriched in detail, on how to combat potential COVID-19 threats and ensure the safety of all the athletes within the facility.

Some of his athletes, have been permitted to continue competitive training since the province of Ontario entered stage one.

With stage three in effect, Sandford says stage three is indefinitely, more harmful than the previous two stages to his business.

Most of his clubs are over the maximum of 50 participants in each of the sports. To achieve effective social distancing measures, a facility must be 7,200 square-feet to achieve that.

"Now with this new order we're restricted. We're submitting an exemption request."

Sandford says there are more clubs significantly impacted by these provincial measures. Although some aspects of the business such as day camps have been operational since July 6 there's no definitive way for other sports clubs to run full sessions.

There is also no alternative. Gymnastics equipment cannot be hauled outdoors. That would require, the removal of spring-loaded plywood boards and padding to be removed from the facility.

In the meantime, while Bolton Gymnastics continues to wait for updates, Sandford has received pleasant emails from parents.

"Most of the emails I'm getting from parents when they're kids have come back, is how happy their children are after they've participated just because now, they're socially interacting and engaging with other children."

The 30-year Bolton resident will continue enforcing every safety measure possible to make the environment safe and welcoming for parents, players and coaches.

Patrons can head to boltongymnastics.ca under the registered tab, there is a return to play summary for families to read over all the numerous protocols that Sandford has set in stone.

2020 Ontario Games postponed until next summer

Written By BRIAN LOCKHART

There will be some disappointed young athletes in Ontario this week, with the 2020 Ontario Summer Games being cancelled.

The games were scheduled to take place in London from July 30 to August 2.

London was going to play host to back-to-back games after hosting the event in 2018. The games are held every two years.

After much discussion and monitoring the current situation, organizers announced the 2020 games would not take place.

However, the games will take place in 2021, again in London.

The games would have hosted over 3,400 youth athletes, coaches, and officials.

There are 19 different sports that take place during the games.

"This was a difficult decision however, due to the COVID-19 pandemic and restrictions around mass gatherings, it is one of that need to be made," said Bill Merrylees, chair, London 2020 Ontario Summer Games. "We are in full support of this decision and look forward to welcoming these Games back to London in 2021."

With so many people taking part in the games, the projected financial impact would over $5 million to the city.

"While we are disappointed that the Games have been postponed, we know that it's the right decision as the health and safety of athletes, coaches, parents, volunteers, sponsors, and community is the top priority," said Zanth Jarvis, director, Sport Tourism – Tourism London. "Although we'll miss this even in 2020, we're happy that it will still be hosted in London and look forward to its triumphant return in 2021."

The Ontario Summer Games were first hosted by the City of Oshawa in 1973.

Since then, the Games have grown to host over 3,400 participants competing in 19 sports.

Over 700 volunteers also take part in the games.

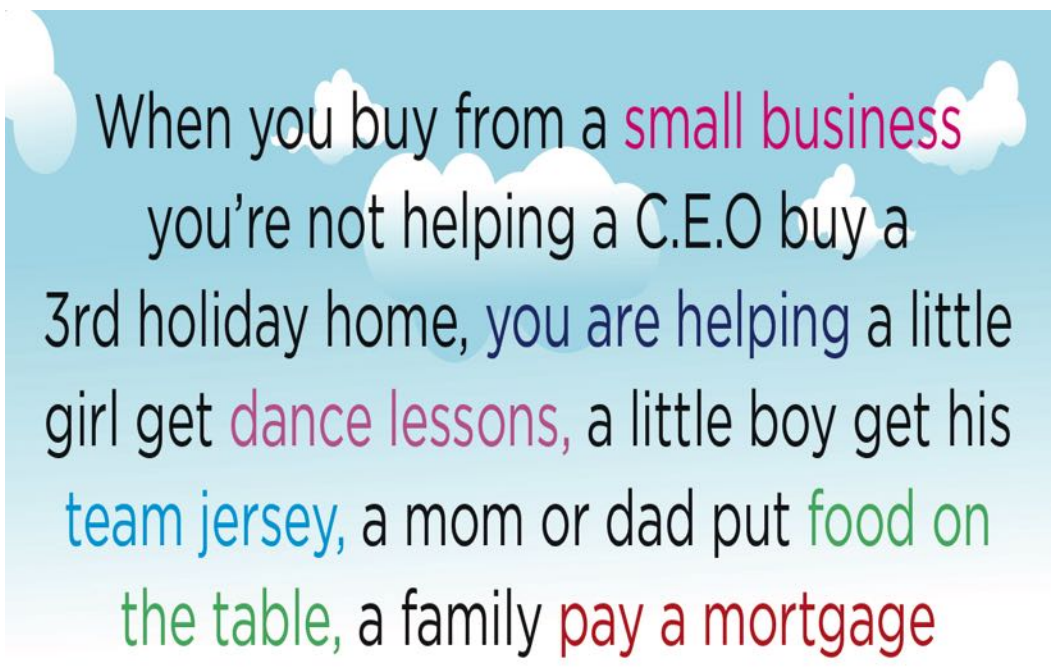

The London Games will be the 26th event.

For others, the Games are a stepping stone towards the Pan Am Games or even the Olympics.
